Relations with the Crown. The two Elizabethan Charters. present volume contains the record of municipal work done in the reigns of Henry VIII and his three successors by the close corporation which had been created by an Act of Parliament in 1489. For exactly a century the Act proved a sufficient instrument of government; it was not till 1589 that a new governing charter was obtained. The severity of the Elizabethan lawyers in dealing with communities which had not taken the necessary legal steps to become bodies 'corporate and politic in fact and in name,' was no doubt one chief cause which induced the Leicester town council to secure a charter of incorporation. There was always a risk lest 'misnomer of corporation' should invalidate legal transactions in which the council was concerned, unless the correct name and address of the body corporate had been formally recorded in a royal charter. In 1589 the Mayor, 24 brethren and 48 comburgesses, to whom Henry VII had given authority to act in the name of the whole body of inhabitants, were declared by charter to be a body corporate with the name for ever of the 'Mayor and burgesses of the town of Leicester.'

The old term 'brethren' was changed to the more usual 'Aldermen',' and the term 'comburgesses,' which had been used to distinguish the Forty-eight from the body of burgesses, was changed to 'burgesses'; vacancies in the Company of the Forty-eight 'burgesses' were to be filled up from the number of 'inhabitants' of Leicester. After the charter there were occasional allusions to the 'free burgesses,' meaning those persons who had been enrolled as members of the Chapman's Gild (p. 425), but the verbal change which was sanctioned by the charter went far to remove the last traces of the original share of the members of the borough community in the government of the borough. If only the members of the close corporation were to be called burgesses, the idea that they were acting on behalf of a larger body whose members also had burgess rights was the more easily lost to sight. The rest of the community were 'inhabitants'; 'commoners' if they contributed to borough charges, 'freemen' if they had paid the fees of the Chapman's Gild.

Even before the charter of 1589 a tendency was creeping in to use the convenient shorthand term 'corporation' for the cumbrous 'Mayor, brethren, and comburgesses' or its variants. The term 'corporation' was used in 1578 (p. 172), and the phrase 'the whole Company of the Twenty-four and Forty-eight now assembled for and in the name of the body politic and corporate of the town of Leicester' (p. 178) comes also from that year. This phrase marks a half-way stage between the 'Twenty-four and Forty-eight present in the name of the whole body of the town' which was long, truthful and historical, and the form introduced by the charter which was sufficiently legal but dangerously short.

It was the events of 1585-8 which brought the need of a charter of incorporation to the notice of the borough lawyers, for the council had been negociating land conveyances on a large scale. In 1540 (p. 46), the two Companies had negociated their leases in the name of the 'Mayor, burgesses and community' and in their name secured benefactions for the welfare of the borough; but the purchase of the lease of the Grange Farm¹ in the South Fields engaged the Companies in a number of transactions for which this phrase seemed unsuitable. It was not certain that all their transactions could be regarded as tending to the welfare of the community at large. But of the purchase of the Grange and of its effect on the corporation's view of the 'town's good' more will be said below. Certain it is that the purchase of the Grange lease paved the way to still larger municipal speculations. It had long been desired to purchase for a perpetual rent all the lands in the borough which owed rent to the Duchy of Lancaster or to the Crown. The council wanted the control of the leases, and also wished to redeem the small chief-rents due to the King from a number of tenements which were borough property (p. 7). The rents which were paid to the Duchy by the chamberlains (or borough treasurers) traced in some cases back to early times, when they were paid to the medieval Earls of Leicester: others arose out of the confiscations of the Reformation. The numerous tenements of the hospitals and gilds and of the College of St Mary, which had come to the Crown on the dissolution of charities and gilds, had been allowed to fall into disrepair, and the result of a commission of enquiry in 1587 (p. 239 sqq.) was to open the way for a municipal bargain. The sum required for adequate repairs was declared to be over £5000, and Oueen Elizabeth, glad to escape the necessity of spending, agreed to part with the lands at a perpetual rent, the rent then actually due from the lands, namely, £137 odd. Leicester, which had failed throughout the medieval period to obtain the 'firma burgi,' succeeded in getting something like it in 1589. With the charter of incorporation was coupled a grant of crown and duchy lands in fee farm: a list of all the tenants who, under the grant of fee farm, owed rent to the corporation instead of to the Queen's collectors, forms part of the charter. Thus the houses and bits of land, which the burgesses of Leicester in former generations had bequeathed to the Leicester hospitals, gilds and charities, for their souls' ransom, came after many days to yield their rents to the borough treasury, and in this there was a measure of rough justice.

The charter of 1589 did not long give full satisfaction: in ten years the corporation sought a new charter and a fuller definition of powers. The name 'Mayor and burgesses of the town of Leicester' was to be changed to the 'Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses of the borough of Leicester,' a more usual form, and one which the corporation probably desired to secure in order to strengthen its hold on certain profitable issues, which had recently been leased to the borough by Sir Edward Hastings. In 1594 (pp. 299, 300), in return for a rent of £10, he had transferred to the corporation his profits from the borough court, namely, amercements, waifs and strays, felons' goods, and canmoll (the old fee due to the Earls of Leicester on the sale of beer by retail<sup>2</sup>); and in 1597 (pp. 339, 348) he gave up his office of Steward of the town of Leicester, 'otherwise called Town Clerk,' an act which was confirmed by the Queen under the seal of the Duchy Court. It was stipulated only that a second copy of the court rolls of the town, hitherto kept no doubt by the Steward, should still be kept and should be deposited in the Duchy Court. This made it desirable that the office of the Steward, and of the bailiffs who were his executive officers, should be recognised in the borough charter. The corporation had long sought to secure the control of the bailiwick, and had purchased leases from the Danets, who held the office by letters patent. During the term of the lease the corporation had generally nominated two bailiffs, changing one at least yearly. The corporation sought a permanent grant in 1552 (p. 69), and again tried for a clause in the charter of 1589 (pp. 235, 238), but so far had not succeeded. The charter of 1500 secured to the 24 Aldermen the right to elect1 a Recorder2, a Steward, two bailiffs, a town or Mayor's clerk, and serjeants-at-mace; half of the serjeants-at-mace had hitherto been nominated by the bailiff (pp. 299, 316).

The first occupants of these offices were named in the charter; the then Recorder was continued; Thomas Ward, who had been Sir E. Hastings' deputy, was continued as Steward, and two new bailiffs were named. In attempting to work the charter, the corporation found it necessary to acknowledge John Wilne, who had been holding the office of bailiff (pp. 299, 316, 383, 389); and the other two bailiffs are heard of no more. The question of the corporation's rights in elections to these offices was reopened in the next reign.

The other clauses of the charter can be briefly summarized. Under the name of the Mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, the charter gave to the corporation a constant succession and power to use a common seal, a point omitted in the earlier charter. The charter of 1589 had given authority in general terms to the court of the borough, the Portmanmoot. Under the charter of 1599 the court's jurisdictional rights were more closely defined. The Leicester justices of the peace by the charter of Henry VII (Vol. II. p. 366) had power to try all cases of felony, but the charter of 1599 required a special mandate for the trial by justices of the peace of any case touching life and limb. The borough court was declared to be a court of record, its powers were defined, and its jurisdiction in real actions acknowledged.

In conclusion the charter recorded the grant to the borough of a right which had long been sought. The exempt jurisdictions of the Bishop's Fee, the parishes of St Mary and St Leonard, and the Newark, were brought under municipal control. The relations of the Bishop's Fee to the borough had given trouble all through medieval times, as has been noticed in our earlier volumes. The inclusion of the Fee had been asked for in 1552 (p. 69) and the inclusion of all the privileged areas had been asked for in 1589 (p. 233). Even after the charter of 1599, the rights of the corporation remained but ill defined; dispute with the inhabitants of Newark began at once (pp. 423, 443) and lasted on into the next reign.

The inclusion of a special acknowledgement of the corporation's right to issue licences for retail trade and to forbid unlicensed retail trade (fair-times excepted) was due to the difficulty which had arisen just at this time with the glovers of certain neighbouring market-towns, who refused to purchase the Leicester licence, and persisted in visiting the Leicester market. The details of the dispute will be discussed below.

Finally the charter contained a clause to support the corporation in enforcing a bylaw on the subject of malt-kilns (as a precaution against fire and perhaps to repress a nuisance); there was also a clause to secure the legitimacy of the newly-established wool-market, whose tolls and profits were to be used for the relief of the poor.

The charters of 1589 and of 1599 did not accord to the corporation by any means all the privileges which had been made the subject of petition. It had been hoped to make the town a county of itself, mainly with a view to a more complete control of the commission of musters and the commission for levying subsidies; perhaps also with a view to the enjoyment of other subordinate privileges enjoyed by cities that were counties, such as the licensing of butchers to kill in Lent (p. 396). It was hoped (p. 238) that the Mayor's probate of wills and bonds for orphans' goods and punishment of loose women would all be authorized explicitly by the charter, but these matters were eventually left to be dealt with in the customary way without specific authority. In one form of the petition for a new charter (p. 239), it was suggested that 'the inhabitants of the town and parishes be free burgesses of the town,' but both charters treat the members of the corporation alone as burgesses and lay down no rule on the subject.

Relations with the Hastings family. It was probably hoped in the borough that the charter would leave the corporation in permanent possession of the stewardship and bailiwick, and so rid it of that measure of dependence on the Hastings family which the Hastings' stewardship of the honour and town of Leicester secured. The presence in the borough court of a Steward and Bailiff not of the corporation's appointing was among the last evidences of the seignorial power of the feudal lords of the borough. But the charter had not finally settled the matter. The precise relationship of the honour court and borough court, and of the Stewardship of the honour and the Stewardship of the borough, were questions which could be reopened at any time. Sir Edward Hastings had only been able to alienate his life interest in the profits of the borough court, and in the next reign the Hastings family recovered a measure of control, as the result of a compromise.

It was as Stewards of the Honour (called also the Town), that the Hastings family had first obtained authority in Leicester. On the first page of our text, George, third Baron Hastings (afterwards first Earl of Huntingdon), appears as Steward, required by royal precept to lead the inhabitants of Leicester to war in case of need; later on his son Francis, the second Earl, appears in the same position (p. 48). They did not as Stewards actually preside over any local court, but appointed deputies for this work: they served however in person on the commissions of musters and for the collection of subsidies, and hence appear often in the borough accounts as recipients of complimentary gifts. The Stewardship and Receivership of the Honour was held for a time by Edward, Lord Hastings of Loughborough, the brother of Francis. On Edward's death in 1573 both offices were conferred by patent on Henry the third Earl (p. 148), who negociated in 1591 that his brother Sir Edward Hastings should receive the Steward-It was Henry, the third Earl, Queen Elizabeth's possible successor, President of the Council of the North, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Leicester, a member of all the commissions of musters and subsidies, who was first able to convert his Stewardship of the honour into a guardianship of the borough of a very practical sort. name of the Earl of Huntingdon in the Elizabethan records occupies the place of the Earl of Leicester in the medieval records. To the men of Leicester, the Earl of Huntingdon was the earl; Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, once visited the town, was feasted, and distributed largess (pp. 201, 205), but he came only as the Earl of Huntingdon's brother-in-law (Catharine Dudley was Countess of Huntingdon), as a guest, and not as one having official rights in the borough.

Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, bought (about 1562) the site of the abbey of St Mary de Pratis from William Lord Parr, Marquis of Northampton, to whom it had been granted by the Crown: eventually the house which the Earl built from the abbey materials passed to his brother Sir Edward Hastings1. In 15692 the Earl of Huntingdon bought a residence in Leicester, in the Swinesmarket, or High Street, and this was known as Lord's Place. His relations with the borough were for the more part friendly: he was viewed rather as a powerful patron than as a dangerous official with rights of a definite kind. His friendship meant direct financial aid, for instance, in loans and in gifts for the relief of the poor; his alliance secured support in high places in the event of litigation. His enmity could no longer make itself felt in the despotic government of feudal lordship, that lordship having passed to the Crown; but by indirect means he could make his power dangerous to the town, and this appears clearly in his correspondence with the Mayor. He and his brother George, who succeeded him in the earldom in 1595, could, as Lords Lieutenant, determine the amount of the military levy much at their pleasure (pp. 262, 400, 423): and their aid was all important in determining to the advantage of the borough any points in dispute with the county; as for instance touching the relations with neighbouring markets, or the county's contribution to poor relief or hospital maintenance (pp. 387, 397, 419, 422-9).

The relations of the town with Henry were more amicable than those with his successor. Henry's Puritan leanings were, it would seem, acceptable to the majority in the town, and on more than one occasion the town had reason to be grateful to him for his willingness to accede to petitions for relief. He lent and gave money in aid of the scheme to start a workhouse, where the poor would be taught weaving (pp. 134, 200, 283, 346), and in consequence his consent had to be asked when a new 'clothier' was appointed to manage the industry. In the same way he lent or gave money for providing a stock of coal and gave the carriage (pp. 178–9, 202, 278, 283); he gave a sum of £40 for the relief of the poor (p. 346). He is said to have given money to the foundation of a lectureship, and he exercised control over the appointment of the lecturer (pp. 118, 226). In return for these loans and gifts' he expected to have his wishes regarded in appointments of all kinds. He interfered in such small matters as the lease of the sheep-pens (p. 188) and the nomination of the wool-hall keeper (p. 373); believing (wrongly) that the Recorder intended to resign, he suggested a successor (p. 278); and in the elections to Parliament he regularly made his wishes known. With regard to parliamentary elections, however, there were rival powers, for the Chancellor of the Duchy, and the Privy Council also, wrote letters to the borough on this subject (pp. 209-11, 227, 289, 331, 336-7). The town was mainly anxious to secure a member who would pay his own expenses (pp. 290, 336). One member promised to take nothing for his expenses unless he 'did good' to the town (p. 188). The town desired that the member should be one of the burgesses if possible (p. 290). The story of the election of a candidate who appeared in the Earl's livery (a blue coat with a bull's head crest), and presented himself as the Earl's man, though the Earl had strenuously opposed him, is an amusing instance of the miscarriage of influence (pp. 435-6, 448)1.

For the rest, the Earls of Huntingdon and the members of their family appear with other great lords as recipients and donors of gifts of courtesy, and as the owners of companies of strolling players, of bearwards, jesters and minstrels.

The Corporation and its Officers. If on the one hand the two 'Companies' of the Twenty-four and Forty-eight were sometimes called the 'corporation' before the formal act of incorporation, on the other hand the phrases which implied that the corporation was there to act on 'the town's behalf' and to administer the 'town land' for the public advantage continue to appear on the council's minutes after that formal act2. The language of the charter of incorporation, as we have noticed, tended to obscure the fact that the close corporation had been created to administer the 'town's good' for the town's advantage: but the spirit of the Middle Ages was not yet dead, and spoke in the language of the Tudor corporators. The Elizabethan town-clerk, William Dethick, did not share the opinion of his successor of 1835, who maintained that the 'town land' in the South Fields was 'the absolute property of the corporation, altogether independent of any moral obligation to apply it to the use of any other than the select body3.'

The two 'Companies' or 'societies' of Twenty-four and Forty-eight are referred to under various titles in these records. The Twenty-four (of whom the Mayor was one) were called the Mayor's brethren, or the Masters of the Bench (p. 38), or the Masters (p. 29), or the Bench (pp. 4, 285), or the 'worshipful company of the Four-and-twenty' (pp. 159, 168). When the Mayor and his brethren gave courtesies to magnates visiting the town, Mistress Mayoress, and her 'sisters' (the wives of the brethren), gave courtesies to the magnates' wives (for instance p. 57). The formality of setting a new member of the Twentyfour upon the Bench was performed in the Portmanmoot, in open court (p. 332). Until 1599 the term Alderman had been the title of ten out of the Twenty-four who were the superior officers of wards, and of their office more will be said below, but the charter of 1599 gave the title Alderman to each of the Four-and-twenty, as was usual in many other boroughs1. The Forty-eight were sometimes called the 'commonty' (p. 29) because they represented (in the old idea) the commons of the borough; sometimes the Council (p. 159), the comburgesses, and, after the charter of 1599, the Common Council (p. 361). The earliest lists of the members of the Companies come from 1558-9. Later in Elizabeth's reign the town-clerk made lists of those present at all the larger common halls. We have no ready means of forming a statistical estimate of the trade or craft interests represented in the Companies, but there is no indication that the choice of councillors was restricted in any way to particular trades or crafts.

Many bylaws were passed on the subject of refusal to serve as Mayor or as one of the Twenty-four, and heavy fines were paid to obtain release from service for a term of years. There seems to have been no unwillingness to serve as a member of the Fortyeight, who were less often summoned and less heavily taxed than the Twenty-four: no fine was exacted for 'redemption' of this service. A vacancy in the Forty-eight was filled by the election of a freeman of the borough (p. 318), the choice lying with the Twenty-four. Only members of the Forty-eight were eligible to vacancies among the Twenty-four, but sometimes the freedom of the borough, membership of the Forty-eight, and membership of the Twenty-four, were conferred simultaneously on some wealthy new-comer whose services were required (pp. 193-4). Resignation of membership of either Company could be allowed (p. 164), and cases of dismissal from the Twenty-four and Forty-eight are recorded. One was dismissed from the 'Company and Counsel of the town' 'for divers causes objected'

(p. 157), one for a moral offence (p. 318), and in 1599 five were dismissed from the Forty-eight for debt or absence, and one because he was 'decayed in substance and ability.'

The members of the two Companies were subjected in some cases to heavier penalties than other persons for the infringement of borough laws. But as of old burgesses1 had been exempted from the severer forms of imprisonment, so in the Tudor period the comburgesses or members of the two Companies were similarly exempt. A bylaw of 1581 (p. 185) ordered that members of the Forty-eight should be imprisoned at the new and not at the old hall, where the dungeons were probably fouler. It was left also to the Mayor's pleasure to decide whether the hall door should be locked upon imprisoned members of this Company or not, a remnant probably of the old doctrine that an offending burgess had a claim to the mitigated form of confinement known as 'free custody.' Some money fines were doubled for the Twenty-four; or doubled for the Forty-eight and quadrupled for the Twenty-four (pp. 16, 181); and there were many bylaws fixing penalties for neglect of public duties on the part of members of the two Companies, for instance neglect of summons, refusal to 'wait on the Mayor' at fair-times (as a body-guard), and fines for lateness in arrival at common halls, or for early departure.

There was no bylaw to determine on what occasion the Fortyeight as well as the Twenty-four should be summoned, nor any to determine how many members of each Company or of the two jointly must be present to give validity to the proceedings. 1500 it was ordered that the members of either of the Companies who absented themselves from a meeting for the election of the Mayor or from other meetings should have no vote for the election or 'for any other matter at any common hall hereafter.' The Mayor was to be elected by such of the two Companies as were present 'and so likewise of other matters at all other Common Halls.' Nevertheless in 1596 it was decided that as only 26 out of the two Companies were present, the meeting could not be held (p. 327). The cases in which voting is mentioned are rare, and they reveal how many constitutional points were still allowed to remain undecided. Although there are references in the earlier minutes to matters agreed to by both Companies 'or the most part' (p. 188), until 1591 the records contain nothing of the nature of a division list, or clear indication of voting. The first meeting in which a division is described was that in which the union of the parishes of St Peter and All Saints was discussed. There was a party in favour of union with St Martin's, and the town-clerk's account of the division is curious. He notes the assembly of 55 of both Companies, 'whereof all but 13 or 15 gave their consents to the union, for that they were bidden by Mr Mayor that so many as would not consent thereunto should go forth of the hall or parlour. So as thereupon there went out but 15 or thereabouts, the Mayor remaining in the parlour' (p. 271). importance of the Mayor's vote or 'voice' is dwelt on again in 1593 (p. 290), when there was a division on the question whether or no the Chancellor of the Duchy might nominate one of the burgesses of Parliament, 'and by some five or six of the elders, it was agreed that he should have it. But by the most and greater part with the consent of the Mayor it was agreed to have no stranger, and thereupon the Mayor was chosen by the most part of the two Companies, especially of the Forty-eight, and by himself, to be a burgess of Parliament.' The 'ancients' of the two Companies are often somewhat vaguely spoken of as persons of superior importance, and the idea that quality, at all events the quality of seniority in office, was in part a determinant of the value of votes, seems to have been present in the mind at least of the town-clerk, and perhaps generally. The side which had failed to secure the Mayor's support might fail to win, even though it had a majority. Unless there was pretty general unanimity of opinion among the 'ancients,' it might be a case of 'speeches used, but not agreed upon and therefore not executed' (p. 281). A close division on the subject of the assize of beer, 25 to 23, led to the withholding of any new assize, only because the parties were so far from unanimous on the subject of price (p. 322).

In 1555 (pp. 83–4) the question of the official dress of the Twenty-four and the Forty-eight was under discussion. The charter of John of Gaunt had promised 'robes of his livery' to the two town bailiffs (II. p. 152) but no reference to official dress is made till in 1555 some 'newfangledness' was proposed which called forth the opposition of the Lord Chancellor, and also of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who warned the Mayor and his brethren to keep to the old customs. Six weeks later the first 'act for wearing of scarlet' appears upon the records, a scarlet gown being required of the Mayor only. He was required to use it as of ancient time and on the accustomed occasions. Later on these were defined as Christmas,

New Year, Twelfth-day, Easter, Whitsunday, and the fair-days (p. 172), and later on the 'Queen's Majesty's day,' and to meet the judges at the assizes (p. 242). In 1575, when the town was preparing for the Oueen's visit, it was ordered that the Mayor and all former Mayors should wear scarlet, and the rest of the Twenty-four black gowns of new, decent, and comely fashion. The Forty-eight were to wear coats of black cloth, guarded with velvet. Both Companies were to ride, but only the Twenty-four had to have a footman and foot-cloths or horse trappings. The Twenty-four were fined for not wearing gowns at common halls, and for appearing in white hose (p. 102); gowns at the close of the century were required also of the Forty-eight (p. 348), and the Companies had to wear them at assizes, sessions and fairs (p. 353). In 1599 (p. 382) 'they which wear scarlet' were required to wear caps in fine weather. The Recorder wore a scarlet gown, purchased at the expense of the town (p. 180). The other gowns were not provided at the town's expense.

In the accounts of the election to the Mayoralty there is no evidence pointing to a system of rotation. Generally two persons were nominated, and the one not elected stood again next year. The Mayor's fee of £10 was in 1572 raised to £13.6s.8d. 'towards the better maintenance of his housekeeping' (p. 137). The Recorder's salary of £1.6s.8d. was raised to £4, and the fee of the Mayor's clerk, who was also clerk of the peace, was raised from 6s.8d. to 33s.4d. The real source of his income was fees paid on admission to the Chapman's Gild, the Companies and the like, and fees for legal business (p. 159).

The two Chamberlains were chosen, one from the Twenty-four, the other from the Forty-eight<sup>1</sup>. They received a pound apiece for their work in drawing up the borough accounts and surveying the borough property. Many were willing to pay a heavy fine to redeem themselves from service as Chamberlains. The ten Aldermen of the ten wards received no yearly salary. They seem to have held office for life, the succession being determined by the Twenty-four<sup>2</sup>. Within their wards it was their duty to see to the execution of the borough bylaws. They acted at first as ale-tasters, but an Alderman who was himself a brewer had to leave the testing in his ward to the

<sup>2</sup> It does not appear that all were former Mayors, though this was true of many.

Alderman of another ward (p. 16). Occasionally the council appointed special officers as ale-tasters, but they were not elected with the same regularity as the fish, leather, and meat-testers. Besides seeing to the enforcement of the assizes of bread and beer, the Aldermen had to register all guests at inns, on the report of their hosts (p. 75); they administered poor relief within their wards (pp. 155, 202); they saw to the arming of the men contributed by the wards to the general muster (p. 170); the duty of compelling the inhabitants to attend church and hear sermons on week-days was performed by constables of their appointing (p. 337); their consent was needed to the setting up of kilns (p. 216), either because they were surveyors of nuisances, or responsible for the protection of the wards from fire; they assessed the taxation of the subsidy in their wards (p. 101). They might appoint deputies. The constables were in some measure under their control (pp. 242, 337), but the constables and the frithborhs or 'thirdbarrows' of the wards were of the council's appointment (p. 164). The persons appointed as 'frithborhs' had to make presentments against offenders of all kinds. Unfortunately none of the Leicester 'presentments' has been kept for this period. The presentments were the principal means of bringing to the notice of the chief members of the council, sitting on the Bench in the Portmanmoot, the grievances most felt by the voteless burgess, who had no other means of making his opinion heard; that this was so is clearly brought out in the Nottingham records1. Much of the action of the council was doubtless suggested by these 'verdicts' of the sworn men of the wards. At Leicester it was further the frithborh's duty to 'give true warning nightly to the watchmen during the watching time2. The constables made the arrests, supported the borough officers in the execution of their duty<sup>3</sup>, and were armed with bills and protected with head-pieces (p. 101).

The Watch and the Waits. The watchmen kept watch only during the summer months, from Ascension Eve to Michaelmas (pp. 319, 325, 420), according to the old rule reinforced by the Statute of Winchester. They were charged on Ascension Eve by the Mayor, and sworn in by the constables. It is not made clear whether the town-waits continued to serve as watchmen or not. The waits, who are repeatedly alluded to, were not, it would seem, a numerous company (p. 451). The town provided their livery of orange or tawny, their collars and scutcheons, the cinquefoil badges on their arms (pp. 170, 184, 194)<sup>1</sup>. They were paid at first by the fees they received when they acted as minstrels at private houses, and later on regular wages were paid by the council. The instruments they played were the bass and treble viol (p. 439). They attended partly as minstrels, partly perhaps as watchmen, upon the Mayor, when he perambulated the fairs, accompanied by other armed men<sup>2</sup>.

The Mayor's serjeant received a gown at the town's expense, but was paid by his fees till 1581, when the Twenty-four gave him 1s. each and the Forty-eight 6d. each per annum. There were beadles, whose tawny gowns were provided by the town (pp. 184, 206), and they received 20s. or 26s. 8d. a year (pp. 116, 264), probably acting as town-criers. A cleaner of the market-place got 6s. 8d. a year. The officers of the borough had become far more numerous than in the preceding period.

Borough Finance. The system of rating used by the close corporation of the sixteenth century is peculiar; it deserves a place in the history of the development of the 'corporation concept.' As it affords one of the best measures by which to estimate the equity of the proceedings of the governing body, and the morality of the principles which guided them in dealing with the borough community, entrusted without safeguard to their charge, it will be well to trace the steps by which this curious system was established. Until the middle of the century there was no regular system in the assessment of rates. Sometimes, as in 1515, a rate to pay off the borough debts was levied and assessed on the wards as though it had been a royal subsidy. On this occasion a sum of £21 was needed, about what a 'fifteenth' was expected to produce in Leicester. The Mayor and brethren were abused in 1517 for their assessment (p. 4), and in 1521 the two Companies sustained alone the charge for providing the King with ten archers. The Twenty-four agreed to provide five archers, the Forty-eight also five. This we shall find later on was the usual proportion in dividing the responsibilities of the two Companies. In 1540 the cost of getting the charters confirmed was defrayed mainly by the two religious gilds of Corpus Christi and St Margaret, each contributing £10. Perhaps a suspicion of the fate that was shortly to overtake them prompted this generosity. At the same time the butchers' and smiths' 'occupations' or fellowships contributed trifling sums.

A full account of the entries is given in Kelly's Notices, 133-9.

method was not again adopted. In 1546 the Forty-eight promised to pay £10 towards the expense of the sheep-pens, and the Twenty-four are not mentioned (p. 53), but the record of their gift of a similar amount may be missing. In 1548 the levy of soldiers at a cost of £48 was defrayed by a collection made by the churchwardens of St Peter's, All Saints', St Margaret's, St Nicholas', St Martin's, and St Mary's. This parochial collection, the usual method for poor relief under act of Parliament, was not used again for other public purposes till in 1600 the parishes were required to contribute small weekly charges to the maintenance of maimed soldiers, the spital on Belgrave Road, the marshalsey or debtors' prison, and in aid of certain persons incurring loss by fire (p. 403). Next, in 1551, the two Companies took upon themselves the charges of a suit concerning the agistment of cattle in Beaumont Leys, the Twenty-four paying 2s. each, the Forty-eight 1s. each, each promising to pay more if more were needed. In 1554 a 'leyre' or rate was assessed 'in manner of a fifteenth,' to pay the expense of a confirmation of charters, but the Twenty-four were taxed at 5s. each, the Forty-eight at 2s. 6d. each, and the commoners were assessed in their wards, their share being £6. 14s. 4d. A similar scheme, the proportions again being a third from the Twenty-four, a third from the Forty-eight, and a third from commons, was used to pay for a levy of soldiers in 1558, for a confirmation of charters in 1559, for the repairs of the town with a view to the Queen's visit in 1562, to furnish armour and pikes in 1569, and to pay the expenses incurred in connexion with the Rebellion of the North in 1570. Between 1571-5 the two Companies took upon themselves the charge of post-horses, building a house by the school, repairing bridges, and providing the hall with leathern buckets for use in case of fire, and in 1575 each of the Twenty-four paid £2, each of the Forty-eight f, I, towards the expenses of the Queen's visit. In 1555 it had been made a law that the expense of dinners, when presents of venison were consumed, should not be charged to the town account but should be defrayed by those of the Companies who partook (p. 83). This rule was occasionally contravened (p. 205). The sessions dinner provided by the Mayoress was always paid for by the borough.

In 1568 it was agreed by the Companies that ten shares in the state lottery<sup>1</sup> should be bought with £5 out of the town-stock; if any prize was won it was to go to increase the town-stock; if the investment were lost, the sum was to be made up, half by the Twenty-four, half by the Forty-eight. The close corporation of Leicester treated the borough more liberally than the corporation of Oxford, who bought a large number of shares out of a borough rate, without offering the same guarantee against loss.

In 1577 the Twenty-four agreed to pay 4d. a week each to the relief of the poor, the Forty-eight 2d, while the rest of the inhabitants were to be assessed. In the contribution for soldiers in 1577 the Companies paid £12 (in the usual way), while 'the best of the commons' gave in all only £2 odd. In the same year the Twenty-four gave £31 to the cost of the new market-cross, the Forty-eight £15. 5s. 6d, apparently by voluntary subscription. In 1578-9 the system of a third from each Company and the residue from the commons was used to increase the town-stock; for a 'leyre' to raise post-horses, train soldiers, and repair bridges; also for a collection to help to pay for the charges of Hastings Haven, assessed at 8s. on each of the three contributory groups. Similarly when Nantwich was destroyed by fire (p. 201) the commons were charged, but this time 'under the rate for post-horses,' and not explicitly for this extraneous and charitable purpose.

The Companies paid a fixed salary to the Mayor's serjeant by taxing themselves, and paid the waits similarly, though the commons were to be encouraged to give 'what they will' (p. 451). The strolling players were paid in the same way on many occasions; a fixed sum was granted from the Companies and a 'gathering' of a free-will kind was made from the commons who were present at the entertainment. The fee for the town-preacher, the charge of 40 soldiers in 1588 (in preparation for the Spanish invasion), for the expenses of watching plague-stricken houses, and for receiving the Earl of Leicester, were divided in the usual thirds. Most of the large loans were raised by the Companies, but the commons were required to contribute to the loan made to a clothier, who was engaged to teach the poor to make cloth (1584).

In 1590 a subsidy was raised, and 93 persons paid £20. 6s. 8d. (pp. 265-8). This list gives no just idea of the relative means of the inhabitants, being based no doubt on an antique assessment of the fixed subsidy. The equal contributions of the members of the two Companies did not tally with a corresponding equality of income, any more than the values of goods and lands assessed to the subsidy in very round figures, corresponded with the true facts. If the list was really representative, and if 72 out of the 93 were of the Companies, only 21 persons were left in some cases to pay a third of the burden. At the end of the century there were attempts at a closer assessment. In 1599 the Companies were to be taxed, by certain persons named, for the payment of the town's debt, perhaps by some less rough and ready means than the usual equal contribution. In 1600 a reassessment for the subsidy was agreed to (p. 402) and a further levy was made to acquit the town debts. It was agreed that the Twenty-four pay 10s. each, the Forty-eight 5s., the commons their assessment, but any member of the Companies who preferred to lend 20s. in place of giving 5s. might do this, so high was the rate of interest for loans.

The question of assessment for the subsidy was beginning to cause trouble in 1600. 'Many speeches were made,' for that some desired the old method of fixed equal payment, and 'other some' would have it taxed by parishes, whereupon the Hall was divided, and the greater part were in favour of assessment by parishes, but nothing was settled (p. 413). A definite charge of unfairness was made by the Earl of Huntingdon (p. 423), who wrote in Dec. 1600 that 'many of the meanest sort of your town have been driven to lay down their portions equal with those of better wealth than themselves.' He required the service of a soldier, and named the six persons who were to pay the cost. The Mayor and Twenty-four replied that they objected to this method as not accurately discriminating, and that they could disprove the charge of unfairness. In January the Hall agreed to a fresh method of levying a rate for the payment of town debt, the Twenty-four to be divided into three groups of 8 each, at £3, £2. 6s. 8d., and £1. 13s. 4d. per group (in equal shares per head), and the Forty-eight into three groups of 16, at £1, 16s, 8d., £1, and 13s. 4d. per group (in equal shares per head); it was further agreed that all the best commoners, 'being free burgesses,' should be taxed according to their ability. But this assessment was not to establish a precedent (p. 425). The corporation, rightly or wrongly, took the Earl's complaint as aimed not at unfairness in the levy of the commons' share, but at unfairness in taxing the Twenty-four and Forty-eight as if each of the Twenty-four were twice as rich as each of the Forty-eight. As for the charge of the soldier, it was determined that notwithstanding the Earl's letter, half the cost should be borne by the town. In 1602 the old custom of assessing the Companies equally and charging the residue on the commons was restored, by a vote in the common Hall (p. 445). But the burden of paying interest on a loan (p. 449) was taken up by the Companies and the aid of the commons was not invoked for that purpose.

The assessment of the commons was determined by the Mayor and Justices of the Peace, who were all Aldermen. The commons lay absolutely at the mercy of the Companies, by the nature of the constitution, but like other despots, the Companies showed on occasion what seemed like benevolence. The 72 members of the Hall shared too many of the common interests of the borough to be tempted to manipulate the system of borough rating to serve only the immediate financial interest of themselves as individuals. concept of a tripartite borough unity, two Companies and one body of Commons, could be created to tally with this tripartite scheme of finance, so suggestive of sums in greatest common measure and so adaptable to algebraic formulae. The Twenty-four and Forty-eight were not directors of a company with shares in borough profits proportioned to their expenditure. When it was agreed in 1576 to have 24 leather buckets at the town hall, for use in case of fire, they were paid for 'two of the XXIV to a bucket, and four of the XLVIII to a bucket' (p. 163), yet the use of the buckets was not measured in these proportions. But the actual drawing of a line of fiscal division between the two Companies and the Commons went far to change the old feeling of the unity of the borough, and no philosophical idea of a whole in which all the individuals are but parts was ready to recreate it in another form. First the path of extreme individualism had to be trodden, and its course, an easy one, leading to destruction, lay along the borough lands. It was in the management of the large town lands, a management which could not easily be conducted by a very large assembly, that the temptations to self-service, to which the borough men of business were exposed, grew more considerable when the bonds of borough unity were loosened.

The town lands. The leasing and selling of town lands to members of the Companies had gone on for a long time (pp. 17, 38, 148), and may have been fully justifiable; but irregularities were creeping in, as appears in the bylaws, which forbade town lands to be let, sold or exchanged, except by persons duly authorized to act for the Companies (pp. 138, 148). The object of the commissioners who were authorized to convey town land was declared to be 'the most profit of the town' (p. 149), but as the extent of the borough property and the burden of the borough debt increased, those in power felt more and more the need to manipulate this delicate business so as to serve present requirements. Very soon after the purchase of the fee farm in 1589 there were complaints made by some members of the Forty-eight (p. 257). The whole Company complained that the late Mayor had set the town-seal without the consent of a common Hall; the petitioners asked that the lands 'may remain to the use of the Mayor and burgesses' and that none be sold but by consent of a common Hall, also that a full survey of the lands be made. Next year Stanford, one of the ward aldermen, had joined the party of complainants (p. 285) and only ten signatures were appended to the statement that there was no ground for complaint (p. 287). Two commoners were summoned for slandering the Bench, and a royal commission of enquiry was appointed (p. 200) to discover whether any lands, which the Queen had given to support a preacher and clothier and to maintain the town, had been taken for private uses. The Twenty-four, as a counterstep, succeeded in passing a bylaw, ordering any person who disclosed the secrets of common Halls to be fined £5 (p. 291), and appear to have lost nothing by the commission of enquiry. Dethick's entry1 concerning the next Hall, 'at this time nothing agreed upon worth recording,' shrouds perhaps a good deal that might throw light on the psychology of the Elizabethan council. Bylaws requiring due authorization for conveyances of borough lands continued to be passed (pp. 317, 348), silent reflections on past abuses.

Borough loans. The complicated character of the arrangements made to raise borough loans betrays the great scarcity of capital. Loans were generally sought upon the security of the town land (p. 207), interest being paid at the rate of about 11 %. This interest in some cases was raised by a levy on the Twenty-four and Forty-eight (p. 210), but bonds were issued also in the name of the Mayor and burgesses (p. 337); sometimes the security of town land was not deemed sufficient by London lenders, who preferred the security of private persons. To obtain personal surety the Companies pledged the town-hall to the two burgesses who were willing to act as sureties (pp. 209, 210). When the purchase of the Grange lease and the fee farm rents had to be carried through, for the first time the council had to negociate the raising of very large loans, and the lands which were the subject of the purchase were heavily mortgaged.

The borough rental which had been under £20 reached in 1595 a total of £166 (details are on pp. 304-315), and the borough accounts, upon which the whole rental was penned, were nearly doubled in bulk. At the beginning of the period the total of receipt had been about £30, of expense about £20; both sides of the account grew in size till in 1580–1 receipts were £197, expenses £135. After the purchase of the charter the balance was not always favourable to the borough, and the last account closes with a deficit, receipts in 1601–2 being £353, expenses £381. It had been a year of litigation and the council had had trouble with its creditors. The tendency to place the raising of loans with the commissioners who were responsible for letting and selling borough land was beginning (p. 389), and was not likely to have good consequences.

That there was a party on the council opposed to the policy of enclosures is shown by the fact that the reason urged against the Earl's nominee for membership of Parliament was that he was an 'encloser and not likely to redress that wrong in others.'

Pastures. The insufficiency of the pastures round Leicester for the needs of the burgess commoners was a matter often discussed by the Companies, and there was much litigation with those who encroached upon the pasture land. Beaumont Leys, 1068 acres of pasture, had been opened by Henry VIII to the commoners, in exchange for their Frith rights<sup>1</sup>, subject to a payment of 2d. a week on each horse, and 1d. on each cow. But subsequent owners of the Leys raised opposition. In 1551-2 the borough suit against John Corbet (p. 79) was so far successful that Corbet agreed to admit milch kine belonging to the 'poor' from May 1 to August 1 at  $1\frac{1}{2}d$ . a week, and those of the 'rich' at 2d, the labouring horses of the poor at 3d. a week, and of the rich at 4d. Probably in the other months the old arrangement held. In 1561 the Leys<sup>2</sup> were declared open all the year to inhabitants of Leicester on the old terms.

In 1552 (p. 456) a temporary agreement was come to with John Blackwell, farmer of the Bishop's Fee, that the 'Leicester meadows' (i.e. Abbey Meadow³) when they lie open (Aug. 1—May 1) should admit hackneys for 4d. each a year, provided they were branded as belonging to commoners, and that not more than 40 should enter: if however the Mayor and inhabitants could prove their claim to further right, then the arbitration ceased to hold. St Leonard's parishioners alone were given a fuller right, for their cows might enter on payment of 2d., 2 from each house; occupiers or dwellers, using hackney horses to go to market, paid for 1 horse 4d.

The fencing and ditching of the Cowhay was in 1551 (p. 657) ordered to be done by those who had cattle pasturing there, each finding one man for one day's work or the price thereof. Payments for the upkeep of the Cowhay are frequent in the borough accounts. The stint was determined in 1553 (p. 70), 2 cows for each freeman, or 1 cow and 2 heifers; if a freeman had no cows of his own he might hire 2 milch cows. In 1601 the 'Cow Pasture' was let, 'for the bettering thereof and making the same sounder for cattle,' and the proceeds were diverted to a public purpose (p. 439).

In 1600 Manners' consent had to be sought to recover the aftermath of a certain close near the Mary Meadow, which before the recent enclosure had usually been eaten by the town cattle, 'as the other meadow grounds, parcel of the Grange, have been and are eaten.'

In 1584 there was complaint (p. 209) that the town pastures were in the hands of gentlemen who would not let them, so that the council could not get a horse's grass for a reasonable price, and yet were continually charged with the keep of post-horses.

Post. The first entry which shows that the borough maintained post-horses for the royal service comes from 1541–2 (p. 49). At first no regular arrangement seems to have been made for their maintenance (p. 57), but in 1551 the duty of finding four post-horses was farmed out (p. 66). In 1552–3 charges under this head appear in the Chamberlains' accounts (p. 72). In 1569 (p. 126) a bylaw was passed that they should be farmed out and the charge borne by all the inhabitants, not only by the Companies. Next year the number of horses was raised from four to six (p. 30). The demands made on the town were great both in connexion with the Northern rebellion and the movements of Mary Queen of Scots (p. 211).

Trade regulations. The difficulty of securing a monopoly of the trade of the borough for those who had entered the freedom, that is, had become members of the Chapman's Gild, was a matter which took up constantly the attention of the council. In 1540 (pp. 43-4) a petition was sent in to the Chancellor of the Duchy, pointing out that the town was suffering through the admission of foreigners (persons who had not purchased the freedom) to a share in the retail trade of the borough. The petitioners acknowledged that foreigners had in the past been suffered to retail victuals in the town (probably at a time when the town was ill-supplied), and now sought letters patent to exclude them from all retail trade. No outcry was raised against 'foreigners' who sold goods in gross, for their importations were seen to be necessary to the trade of the borough. It was the shop-keepers, licensed by their 'freedom' to retail trade, who objected to foreign competition in retail trade. The appeal to the Duchy was no doubt intended to protect the borough, itself part of the Duchy, from the Duchy tenants of the neighbourhood. It was they who could most easily set at nought the bylaws of the borough and win the support of the Duchy court. The town failed to obtain the desired letters patent, and had to be content with a bylaw which proposed to include victuals among the wares that might not be sold by foreigners except in gross and on market-day. The tendency to admit foreign retailing in victuals in times of scarcity was however too strong, and an exception in favour of victuals had to be made in 1574 (p. 154). As the price of admission to the borough freedom had risen to £5 (p. 156), the poorer classes of foreigners were effectually excluded from competing in licensed retail trade.

The town often had trouble with freemen, who having left Leicester for a time, came back again. There were several exoduses on account of the plague, and those who had gone unflinchingly through the trying season were not inclined to welcome the wanderers home. First it was ordered that those who had left for more than a year and had paid none of the burgess's charges must pay for readmission to the freedom (p. 177). Those who had once been burgesses and had left might sell only on Saturdays (in gross) like foreigners (p. 281). In 1593 (p. 293) all freemen who did not return nightly to Leicester had to pay weekly double in every payment made by resident burgesses to watch and ward, etc. If they did not return as inhabitants by a given time, they were to pay £2 a week to the use of the plague-stricken and poor people. Perhaps some had deserted with a view to escape the cost of the visitation as much as to avoid the risk of contagion.

In 1594 there began a long struggle for the exclusion of the glovers and fellmongers of certain neighbouring market-towns from retail trade in Leicester. There was an 'occupation of glovers' in Leicester (p. 79), and the objection to the 'foreign' glovers seems to have been because they came to buy fells rather than because they came to sell gloves. For some reason glovers seem to have found it easier than other traders to set at nought the bylaws of the borough. The justices of assize had given an order against them, but the influence of the Earl and Countess of Huntingdon, whose interest was strong in Ashby-de-la-Zouch and Loughborough, was against the borough, and on the side of their tenants. The men of Ashby, Loughborough, and Mountsorrel seem to have claimed admission as being themselves residents in market-towns, towns which could meet by retaliation, more or less effectual, the exclusiveness of Leicester. The Leicester council, having re-enacted the old bylaws against foreign retailers (pp. 301–2), rejoiced in securing their bylaw as part of the royal charter of 1599 (p. 363).

Robert Herrick, of Mountsorrel, a glover, seems to have been determined to win admission for himself and his friends, and on payment of £50 he got ten glovers from the country to take up residence and enter the freedom; at the same time six glovers from Loughborough were allowed to attend the market (p. 368). The rest were to be excluded altogether (p. 377). But the borough was unable to hold the position. In 1600 it was agreed that market-town glovers should be admitted if they entered the fellowship of the Leicester glovers and made certain payments of 'brotherhood' money, and a general admission to the Saturday market was accorded to Mountsorrel men on certain payments (p. 410). But there were stringent rules against buying and selling covertly on behalf of others who had made no similar payments.

In spite of this arrangement the conflict dragged wearily on into the next reign. The Leicester authorities proposed to bring the matter before the Court of Star Chamber (p. 419). Several of the points at issue cannot be cleared up by means of the entries in the Hall Books, but it is evident that the Leicester council wished to make the glovers of the neighbouring towns submit to the rules which governed the Leicester glovers. A copy of these rules comes from a later date and shows that the glovers and fellmongers were subject to the same 'ordinal'.' A desire to keep plenty of leather in the town, to provide materials for the glovers' industry, prompted several of the council's regulations, and these offer a good example of the council's method in attempting the control of trade. A law of 1600 (p. 407) excluded all foreign retailers from traffic in the town, except foreign tanners and fellmongers under certain conditions. They were to pay a yearly fee, and each tanner was obliged to bring as much tanned leather to be sold at the leather hall as he bought of raw hides there. Each fellmonger was required to bring in as much wool to the wool-hall weekly as he bought of fells and 'slaughter-ware' in the Saturday market. All purchases must be made from freemen, not strangers, but it seems to have been no longer required that all sales must be made to townsmen (cf. p. 393). The council had a boundless confidence in their power to control economic forces, a confidence which the strength of the borough executive can ill have justified.

In an interesting letter from James Whitelock (p. 440), afterwards judge, the question was discussed whether the corporation could prosecute foreigners trading in Leicester under the Act of 1 and 2 P. and M., c. 7, which forbade any country person to sell by retail any cloth, haberdashery, etc. in any borough, unless he was free of the borough. The Act however forbade only the retailing of goods made by others: the goods of a man's own making might be sold as freely as before the Act. The opinion that men who dwell in one markettown are free on that account to buy and sell in another, Whitelock declared to be wholly mistaken, but he would dissuade the council from any attempt to secure a cancel of the privileges of market-towns within eight miles of Leicester: either their rights are older than those of Leicester, or newer, in which case the law protects Leicester; if they are older, Leicester had better not annoy them.

The borough treasury received not only the fees for admission to the Chapman's Gild, but also annual payments from those who could not pay the large entrance fee for "up-setting" or setting up a shop or a craft (p. 67), and also an entrance fee from all who were made free of any craft. The 'ordinals' or trade regulations of all the crafts were subject to the consent of the Mayor and some of his brethren (p. 19), in some cases of the Mayor and justices of the peace only (p. 100). Certain fines for breaches of the ordinal were paid to the borough treasury by the wardens of the craft or 'occupation,' probably in the proportion of half to the craft and half to the borough. There were occupations, companies, or fellowships, of bakers, barbers, butchers, brewers, chandlers, coopers, cutlers, drapers, fullers, ironmongers, shearmen (shearers of cloth), shoemakers, smiths, tailors, tanners, and weavers, but none of the ordinals is recorded in detail. Other towns supply the details of such craft regulations in abundance.

A few specimen trade bylaws, and episodes arising out of trade bylaws, may be cited as illustrative of municipal thought on the subject of economic legislation. It seems to have been found difficult to discover one guiding principle which should avoid both the Scylla of excessive and the Charybdis of insufficient supply. In one year the risks of 'foreign competition' had to be met, in the next foreign supplies might be found to run short. The makers of bylaws found it difficult to legislate so rapidly as to keep pace with the change of seasons, and the currents in the tide of trade were not all visible to the eye of the legislator. His laws were naturally directed mainly to the redress of the obvious errors of the past; he did not aspire to direct the course of an unknown future. In that future his own laws might work for harm with as much force as the laws of others, drafted for the opposite purpose. But to return to particulars; we have spoken of the attempts (in good years) to exclude 'foreign victual.' There were decisions, in bad years, to admit it, subject to careful regulation. All country bakers were required, in 1520 (p. 15), if they brought bread, to make it of good materials and weigh it according to the assize. They might bring it only on market-days and sell on Wednesday and Friday at the High Cross. They might carry no foreign bread straight to the doors of customers, for that would infringe the retailing rights of freemen. In 1533 a seditious foreign baker (p. 34) said that, as many would want bread at Christmas, he and others intended to bring it, for if they did not there were a hundred people ready to fetch it; and he threatened that the foreign bakers would have staves in their baskets to defend themselves if need be. But 'never a townsman gave him encouragement to say so.'

The chandlers were forbidden (p. 88) to sell wholesale to either townsmen or foreigners. Candle was scarce and dear in winter, and it was thought that too much was sold out of the town to strangers. No butcher might sell tallow to any chandler who was a foreigner, or to any freeman if it were destined to go out of town, from Sept. 29—Feb. 2, unless the stranger or the freeman who bought the tallow would bind himself to bring in for every stone of tallow he took out, 12 lb. of candles by next market-day.

In 1578 there was a 'restraint for millers' (p. 174); no miller, native or foreign, might buy any malt or corn on market-day except for the provision of his own household. Evidently their large purchases were leaving the townsmen short of supplies.

A like attempt was made by law to provide townspeople with honey at the time when it would be scarce: everyone who made honey in summer was required to keep at least a barrel a year to sell in Lent in open market (p. 177).

The laws which were arranged to provide the town with a due supply of licensed and native music show a marked antipathy (in the minds of the legislators) to foreign minstrelsy, an antipathy not shared by all the Leicester commoners since legislation was necessary. No strangers who were not of the company of the town waits were to be suffered to play in Leicester at or in any man's house, the time of the general assizes alone excepted, and then their foreign playing must be only before strangers. Every housekeeper was taxed to the support of the Leicester waits, and they were forbidden to leave the town to play unless they obtained the Mayor's licence; a licence might be granted only for foreign fairs and weddings.

Just as the prices of bread and beer and candle were fixed by assizes, held yearly, and settled by the then current values of corn, malt, and tallow, so the justices of the peace were required under the statute of 5 Eliz. 4, c. 12, to fix the rate of wages for servants, artificers and labourers 'according to the plenty or scarcity of the time.' That this duty was not neglected at Leicester is shown by the annual statement on the Chamberlains' account which notes the cost of sending up the report. The reports of the justices have not been preserved.

Toll and stallage. The corporation, so active in its legislation against foreigners when the protection of native retailing was concerned, was driven at the end of the century to approach the question of the town's monopoly from the opposite point of view. It was discovered in 1598 that there was a weak place in the town's constitution which rendered it possible that toll should be taken at the gates of Leicester, and stallage in the market of Leicester, tolls and stallages which, inasmuch as they were not to come to the borough treasury, could from no point of view seem to offer encouragement to borough trade. The borough had not succeeded in 1589 in securing the fee farm of all the Queen's rights over the market: the shambles, drapery and sheep-pens were granted, but there was no clause treating of the market stalls, such as had been asked for by the petitioners for the charter (p. 237). After the grant of the fee farm, it was brought to the notice of the Queen or the Duchy Court that there were 'concealed' toll and stallage dues, namely that the corporation was taking tolls and stallages without chartered grant (p. 444). The Oueen farmed these concealed dues to a tenant, Randall Manning (p. 356), who in his turn assigned them to Okes and Rogers, who proceeded to an action in the Duchy Court against a burgess who had refused payment. The county justices, perhaps at the instigation of the corporation, addressed the Chancellor of the Duchy and the Earl of Huntingdon, dwelling on the importance of free trade for Leicester, the necessity 'to allure and bring the confining neighbours to resort. traffic and merchandize there' by making them free of toll for anything to be bought or sold there (pp. 355-6). The burgesses had little to urge in evidence on their side beyond the charters of the Earls of Lancaster, which freed the tenants of the honour of Leicester<sup>1</sup>. and the Duchy charters which freed the Duchy tenants, from toll, stallage and such-like charges; these charters had been confirmed by a succession of sovereigns, and had been constantly used by Leicester burgesses in actions for the recovery of toll levied upon them outside the Duchy. But the question, whether a toll was leviable within the Duchy and within the Honour, raised another issue, and the records of the borough and the Duchy had to be minutely searched before a true statement could be made (p. 444). That in 1361 the Duke of Lancaster did levy tolls on trade in the borough was made clear by the draft of the charter in which the Duke prepared to grant to the burgesses release from all manner of tolls, stallages, pickages, tronages and through toll (II. 118), a charter which he did not live to seal. A lease of the farm of the borough which covered this point was obtained from John of Gaunt, and leases were granted also by some of his successors, but when the term of lease ran out, the borough had nothing to show in support of its claim to freedom from the lord's toll.

As the story of the events of 1361 did not help the burgesses of 1600 to prove their case, discussion next arose on the question whether in the fifteenth century the Duchy claim to toll and stallage had been allowed to lapse. It was contended that only a rent for the stalls in the market-place had been taken (pp. 393–4 and so II. 272–7). In 1600 the borough sought to restrict the lease of toll and stallage to these rents which, it was admitted, had been paid to the Queen's bailiff even after the purchase of the fee farm in 1589. But the case was eventually decided against the borough<sup>2</sup>. It was still open for the lord of the Duchy to take toll, and such stallages as were not saved by the fact that the borough had the fee farm of shambles, drapery, and sheep-pens. Even in the drapery the borough had to consider the rights of the Duchy tenant until the lease fell in: no other stalls for drapers might be put up lest the lessor be injured (p. 426).

The grant of the fee farm of the Sheep-pens in 1589 put an end to further litigation on a point which had long been vexatious to the borough. In 1508 (II., preface, p. xxv. and p. 379) the borough having provided the pens, claimed the profits of the sheep market and farmed out its rights. A rent was paid to the Chamberlains in Henry VIII's time (pp. 7, 27), but in 1545 the Crown leased the pens to the bailiff, Robert Catlin; the borough however still sought to control the pens of its own providing (p. 53), and a rent for these was repeatedly paid to the borough. After a suit (p. 116) the town secured a lease from the Duchy (p. 188) and finally the fee farm in 1589. A 'toll of horses' appears regularly on the borough accounts as an item of receipt, and this toll, perhaps 'concealed' from the knowledge of the Queen when she granted the charter of 1589, may have been one of the payments on which the farmer of the Duchy tolls was to lay claim.

Markets. The town was provided with week-day and Saturday shambles, where butchers had their stands on market-day (pp. 118-9, 452). There was a housewives' or women's market (pp. 240, 243, 426), with all its shops in 'foul decay,' 1588 (p. 240); here woollen and linen drapers were not allowed to stand, as their fees were due in the drapery.

The beast market was in Cow Lane, Cank Street and Loseby Lane, and cattle might not be brought in to the Saturday market. The Swine's Market was ordered to be held in Parchment Lane, a side street, instead of in the High Street leading to the East Gate. There was a corn-wall, where corn was sold.

There were three market-days (Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, p. 15), and the borough treasury paid for the cleaning of the market, and the care of its old elm-tree (p. 153); the council forbade the building of shops and lean-tos in the market-place (p. 212), and paid rent for those that were already erected there on 'the Queen's waste' (p. 393).

In 1577 the council agreed to erect a cross or market-house in High Street, and when it was built<sup>1</sup>, a law was passed to protect it from injury. It was forbidden to dust or winnow malt or corn in the cross, and to hang any clothes or aught else upon it (p. 199).

In 1592 the Mayor and corporation granted to Thomas Clark for life the house of St John's (formerly the hospital of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem) on condition that he built it and made it a wool-hall and so left it to the corporation on his death. It was probably on this same site that there stood a Bridewell or house of correction and a workhouse, where the poor were taught to make cloth.

The charter of 1599 granted a market, where sales of wool, wool-thread and yarn might be carried on, provided no neighbouring market were injured, and provided the stallages and fees were given to the relief of the poor and sick. It was to the wool-hall, where this market was held, that foreign fellmongers had to bring their wool when they came to buy fells (p. 407). To develop the wool market the council made efforts to get the county magnates to send their wool there, and negociated for the purchase of wool at a fixed price for seven years to come (pp. 415–6). But activity in municipal trading was not appreciated in all quarters and in 1602 the grant of the market was attacked in the Court of Exchequer (p. 445).

Town halls. On the dissolution of the Corpus Christi Gild, the Corpus Christi hall, which had already been used occasionally for meetings of the corporation (II. 350, 354, and below pp. 26, 49), was regularly used as the 'Mayor's hall,' instead of the old building in St Nicholas parish (p. 70). The old hall continues to appear on the accounts as needing constant repairs: it had been first built in 1274 (I. 383), and rebuilt in 1366-7 (II. 142): when the Corpus Christi Guildhall became the town hall, the old hall was used as a prison and a storehouse. The original 'stock house' or store house (II. 350) near the High Cross was let (p. 141), for the borough stores of coal, and other materials, were sufficiently housed at the two Mayor's halls. The final purchase by the town of the Corpus Christi hall seems to have been effected in 1562-3 (pp. 107-8)1.

The 'Gainsborow Chamber,' standing on the Saturday market, is first mentioned in 1533 (p. 34). The origin of the name is not known. It was on the south-east side of the market and had an underground dungeon, shops on the ground-floor, and an upper room where the justices met<sup>2</sup>. In time of plague, to avoid infection (p. 303), the justices of assize sat in All Saints' Church.

Poor relief. The Chamberlains' accounts show that in 1577-8 (p. 8) the town had licensed certain people to beg for alms: the licensed beggars were authorized to wear the town's badge, no doubt the cinquefoil, on their sleeves<sup>3</sup>. The effect of the statute of 27 H. VIII, c. 25, is first traceable in the notice (1552, p. 69) of the keeping of a poor man's box, to which all fines for infringements of certain bylaws were to be paid. In Feb. 1562 (p. 101) a bylaw was passed that 'order be taken in every parish that two be chosen to make collection for the poor.' This was a year before the Act of 5 Eliz. c. 3 made such collection statutory. In 1568 (pp. 121-2) an act for the relief of the poor and impotent 'over and above the collection required by statute' was passed by the borough. This ordered each of the Twenty-four, at his wedding, to pay to the collector for the poor of his parish 2s. 8d., each of the Forty-eight 1s. 4d., each commoner 8d., and each 'second commoner' 4d. To prevent superfluous feasts at the churchings of women, it was ordered that only one 'compotent mess' be provided for gossips and midwives, and that fees be paid for the poor of the parish on the same scale as above. The parson was to receive the fees and hand them over to the collectors for the poor 'by a bill indented.' The yearly accounts of the collectors of wedding and churching fees were to be laid before the Mayor in the presence of the Companies, and then three or four of the Twenty-four were entrusted with the distribution. Any surplus was to be placed in the treasury for the use of the poor. Further it was ordered that a licensed collector with a locked box should visit the inns and ask strangers for alms for 'universal relief,' and the box was to be cleared weekly by the Mayor and a receiver. The Mayor with the consent of three or four 'ancients' of the Twenty-four was to distribute the same.

The statute of 14 Eliz. c. 5 had for the first time placed the assessment of the contribution to poor relief in the control of the justices of the peace, but no parish was to be required to give more than 6d. a week. In 1577, probably in supplement of this, the Twenty-four agreed to pay 4d. and the Forty-eight 2d. apiece, but decided to allow no licensed beggars (p. 170). There are a few entries on the employment of 'poor men' for special purposes (pp. 146, 167) and a few entries of small costs incurred in clothes and necessaries for poor people, for instance in dressing a child's scabbed head (p. 421) or in helping cripples on their way to the respective places which were chargeable (under the Act) for their relief. The strong measures taken by the council to exclude persons likely to become chargeable to the borough were complained of (p. 351). A bond of £200 was required of a man proposing to settle in Leicester as a guarantee that neither he nor his family would be burdensome to the town. About the same time the Mayor was writing that the heavy burden of poor relief made men refuse to enter 'our societies,' that is, refuse to reside and become burgesses of Leicester.

The council did not receive many charitable bequests during the Tudor period. One grant was made by Mrs Dorothy Darell of 2s. a year each to twenty persons selected by the Mayor and two chief burgesses (pp. 151-2). Mr Harry Smith of Christchurch, Oxford, gave £10, which was administered by the aldermen in their wards (p. 155). The Earl of Huntingdon contributed money on loan or by gift to a fund for the purchase of coal, to be sold at a fixed price of 6d. or 8d. a cwt. to poor people, the money to go to increase the stock (p. 283). The same plan was tried in other boroughs, for instance Oxford and St Alban's, at a somewhat later date.

Besides the two endowed hospitals or 'poor houses' (p. 155), namely the Old or Newark and the New or Wigston's Hospital, there was the spital on the site of St John's chapel at the lower end of Belgrave Gate, which must be distinguished from the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem in High Cross Street and Causeway Lane, later the wool-hall. The council began to be active in maintaining this 'spital' towards the close of the century'. Perhaps advantage had been taken of the Act of 39 Eliz. c. 5 'for erecting of hospitals, maisons de dieu, abiding places or houses of correction' which gave the founders of such places the control of their visitation and leave to fill the vacancies. James Whitelock, the eminent lawyer, was consulted by the borough, and wrote that the borough should get the control of presenting almspeople to the hospital, 'which can be done if you are careful to keep one of your people in the place of ministration' (p. 441); possibly however the spital under discussion may have been Wigston's Hospital, over which the borough had a right of appointment in certain contingencies. The appointment at the Trinity or Newark Hospital lay with the Earl of Huntingdon<sup>2</sup>. In 1587 the borough had planned to build a house for 'such as shall be visited to inhabit during the time of such visitation' (p. 238), and the St John's site was well-suited for the purpose as it was remote from the town. Presumably this was the 'spital' to which the county was repeatedly urged to contribute (pp. 372, 387, 397) on the ground that this had been done in the past (p. 372). The county had made voluntary contributions to Leicester during the worst seasons of visitation, and Leicester in its turn made contributions to some objects in which the contributors can have had less immediate concern, for instance to Hastings haven, Newport poor-box, the relief of Stratford-on-Avon, to the sufferers from fire at Nantwich, and to a poor-house at Waltham Cross.

There were many attempts to foster cloth-making, spinning, and jersey-knitting, in Leicester, by way of 'setting the poor on work,' a subject constantly in the thoughts of Tudor legislators. There was no thought of differentiating houses of correction, workhouses, poor-houses, hospitals, outdoor and indoor relief, and schemes for providing work and training for the young or the unskilled. The charter of 1599 which gave the profits of the Leicester wool market to the relief of the poor and sick was construed (p. 416) as an endowment of the workhouse or place where the poor were 'set on work.' The site of the workhouse adjoined the prison, and the workhouse was probably, like other borough workhouses of the period, a house of correction; the charitable conception was probably represented by the 'poor widows of St John's' (pp. 94, 146) named in 1559, and seemingly the successors to some part of the endowment of the hospital of the knights.

The 'clothing' scheme, as it was generally called, was to meet the needs of those who were able-bodied and would not work, or could not find work, and also to provide technical education for the young and increase the trade of the borough.

As early as 1536 (p. 37) a bylaw was made that the Mayor and Four-and-twenty should make every year three 'kerseys,' and the Forty-eight should each make two, 'as long as they find any profit or wanting therein.' The kersey was a coarse narrow cloth used for hose, and a single 'kersey' meant a piece of about eighteen yards long. The members of the Companies were of course not required to make the pieces of cloth with their own hands, but had to order them from the clothiers, who would thus be encouraged to develop their trade and to offer employment<sup>1</sup>. This interpretation is borne out by the law of 1552 (p. 69). In 1571 a clothier was appointed 'to set the poor on work,' who was paid by the Companies (p. 132) and given a loan to start his trade. This was three years before the statute of 18 Eliz. c. 3 ordered the provision of a stock for clothmaking in workhouses. The scene of the clothier's operations was in all likelihood St John's. In 1584 the council sought to extend the scheme so as to include the teaching of spinning, baize-making, fulling, and weaving (pp. 200, 204), and teachers were to be sent for from Berwick and elsewhere. The council's efforts to start cap-making and knitting 'by which they intend to set on work and maintain the poor people and increase the number of the inhabitants' are referred to in the petitions for the charter of 1589 (pp. 233-4). In 1592, probably in connexion with Thomas Clark's scheme for rebuilding the wool-hall, John Clark was given a stock of money to employ, 'to the setting on work of many in the town about clothing, and relieving such of the poor as cannot work' (p. 278). The limitation of the clothing scheme to the object primarily of poor relief is shown by the addition of the coal money to the clothing stock (1592), the coals to be sold only to the working poor which do work for and under the clothier and the 'true poor indeed' (p. 283). This shows that not all the clothier's pupils were required to live in the workhouse, for those who lived there would not need private supplies The children were put separately under Mrs Clark, the clothier's wife, who taught them jersey-knitting with a capital of £20 lent by the council, on which the council paid interest (p. 327). The Clarks promised to employ 100 people (p. 346). The Leicester scheme attracted sympathy, for a Cornish parson gave a bequest in 1601 (p. 441) 'to set the poor on work.'

The Free School. Save for the mention of a Boys' Hall (I. 196) and a schoolmaster (II. 143) the medieval borough records¹ of Leicester are silent on the subject of education till the reign of Edward VI. In 1552 the Vicar of St Martin's and another were sent to London, to see if they could get the land that was given by the Bishop of Carlisle, to provide a free school in the parish of St Margaret; this land had been sold about 1540 by Mr John Beaumont, who was then Recorder. Beaumont, who had become Master of the Rolls in 1550, was in 1552 in disgrace for corrupt practices. The Bishop of Carlisle was no doubt John Penny, sometime abbot of Leicester, who was a great benefactor to the church of St Margaret, where his body was buried².

Throsby gives reasons for supposing that a free school was maintained in part out of the lands granted to Wigston's Hospital (p. 367) but on this question the borough records throw no light. The free school (or grammar school, p. 233) is first named in these records in 1563-4, where the chamberlains record the expense incurred in fitting up St Peter's Church as a school-house (pp. 110, 112). In 1564–5 the Queen began an annual contribution to the maintenance of the school, namely, £10 paid by the Receiver of the Duchy. In 1565–6, and regularly thereafter, Sir Ralph Rowlat gave £3. 6s. 8d. accounted for, like the Queen's gift, by the chamberlains. The Earl of Huntingdon's gift of £10 is mentioned 1573–4, and the Stanford legacy of £10 was paid in 1596. The salaries of the usher and under-usher, who received together £12. 2s. 6d., appear regularly on the borough account.

In 1573 the Mayor and comburgesses bought from the Queen for £35 all the building materials in St Peter's Church as part of the possessions of the Duchy, and in return the Mayor and comburgesses covenanted to erect a substantial school-house, with windows and doors and covered with slate, and to maintain the same for ever. If the building materials more than sufficed for the school, the surplus was to be sold to provide a conduit of fresh water (pp. 139, 140). The school was built near the High Cross on the site of the Stocks House (p. 140), and in 1574 it was finished (p. 151).

In 1582 all children of strangers (unfranchised persons) who attended the school were ordered by law to pay a fee, which was to go to the stipend of the under-usher (p. 192). The removal of the head-master was a matter which rested with the council: it was agreed in 1594 that Thomas Jesson should be 'tried by some learned man for his sufficiency.' Certain entries in the chamberlains' accounts point to disturbances in the boys' school, perhaps periodic, and connected with old customary festival rites<sup>1</sup>; windows and boards were broken 'at the shutting of the master forth' (p. 205) and desks and forms were smashed on another occasion (pp. 166–7).

Religious teaching. In 1580 (p. 183) a bylaw ordered that every child over eight years be taught the Lord's Prayer, the Articles of Belief, and also to answer to certain points of the Catechism; idiots alone were excepted. The parents were to be fined for neglect, the Twenty-four at 1s. each, the Forty-eight at 6d. each, the commons at 3d. each, with the alternative of three days' imprisonment.

The parish of St Mary petitioned the Earl for a better stipend for their priest, which was £8 a year; the parish had not been able to secure a learned man for this sum and through want of instruction the younger sort had become very undutiful, lewd and disordered (p. 452).

the accounts of 1547–8 (p. 56). In the accounts of other boroughs there are entries of fees of a similar kind at a far earlier date<sup>1</sup>, but compulsory attendance at week-day lectures or sermons began in Elizabeth's reign. In 1562 (p. 101) one person from every house was ordered to attend at every sermon on Wednesday and Friday under a penalty of 4d. The preaching took place 7—8 a.m. (p. 118) at St Martin's (p. 162).

In 1575 the number from each household was raised to two, and the fine to 1s., which was to go to poor-relief. In 1580 the number was again reduced to one, and the fine on the commons to 1d., the Forty-eight were to be fined 2d. and the Twenty-four 4d. In 1587 the aldermen and constables in their several wards were ordered to force men and their wives to come, and there were similar bylaws in 1597 and 1600.

The preacher was appointed by the borough subject to the Earl's consent (p. 226). The salary varied in amount, and the method of raising it varied. Mr Johnson<sup>2</sup> received £24, the popular William Pelsant £40, and Sacheverel £20, which was raised at Sir F. Walsingham's request.

Borough orphans. It is first in the sixteenth century that the responsibility of the borough officers for the wardship of the orphans of burgesses is made clear. In other boroughs it can be proved that this responsibility was accepted at a far earlier date; it can be traced in England as far back as the twelfth century. At a time when boroughs were seeking to escape from seignorial interference, the wardship of orphans was made in some cases one of the articles treated in the borough charter, and many towns, either by charter or by prescription, succeeded in excluding the lord's right of wardship, offering in lieu thereof the control of municipal authority. The inheritance of the burgess orphan was to be protected by the borough court. No guardian could be appointed without the consent of the governing body of the borough, whether in council or in court, and to that body the guardian was obliged to render account at the orphan's majority, or whenever account should be demanded.

With wardship went apprenticeship, and the enrolment of bonds of apprenticeship before the town council has its origin perhaps in the borough control of wardship. At Leicester the first indication of the existence of a borough responsibility for wardship happens to come from 1539, in the shape of an agreement between a master and his apprentice (p. 43). A master agreed to pay his servant a certain sum at the end of the term of apprenticeship, and also to hand over to him at the end of his term, his share of his father's inheritance or 'child's part.' The master, then, was guardian to the boy, and the enrolment on the borough record protected the boy as ward and as apprentice. The wardship was the master's premium. The use of the phrase 'child's part' proves, further, that in Leicester, as in other boroughs, the custom held that the children inherited the third part of their parent's chattels, to be divided equally among them. The charter of Simon de Montfort (I. 49), which made the eldest son his father's heir, affected only landed estate.

In 1561 there is enrolled (pp. 96-7) a full account from the executor of a burgess's will; the account was rendered to the council, to whose audit must be submitted the whole of the expenditure on the orphan children; each item of expense on the clothing and keep of the little boys and girls is set down. In 1563 a lengthy bylaw on the subject of 'orphans' goods' was drafted, no doubt to clear up moot points, rather than to introduce a wholly new system, and in 1572 the law was again amended. The laws applied only to the children of 'townsmen,' that is of burgesses. The next of kin, if franchised, had the first refusal of the wardship, and failing all the kin, the wardship came to any franchised man who, being selected by the council, was willing to accept the charge. Rules were drawn up as to the amount that should be spent on the maintenance of wards, according to their station in life. In spite of rules, however, the payment of the 'child's part' was often a subject of correspondence between the orphan and the Mayor, and a cause of threatened litigation: an acknowledgement of his duty in the protection of orphans' goods formed a not unnecessary part of the Mayor's oath.

The fate of the Recorder, who found that the wardship of his eldest son was 'already begged if I die' (p. 278), might remind burgesses that their privilege was still well worth having, though the wards may not always have found much tenderness at the hands of their corporate nursing mother.

Mills; Ovens. If the control of the wardship of the orphans of burgesses may be regarded as an instance of the early displacement of the medieval seignorial power, on the other hand traces are not wanting of the continuance of that power in Leicester in some antiquated forms. The borough had not succeeded for instance in evading or buying the lord's milling and oven rights. In 1554 (p. 81) an injunction was obtained by certain persons, perhaps farmers of the Newark mills, requiring (it would seem) that Leicester burgesses should grind at their mills. The borough authorities fined these persons under an old act, probably as burgesses suing, without licence of the borough, in a foreign court. The borough could further plead, what would have more influence in affecting the decision of the Duchy court, that the Castle Mills¹ would suffer in consequence of this injunction, and that these last were of more value to the Crown. The farmers decided not to use their injunction and were excused the borough fine.

In 1570 the council hired a man 'to search the waters for setting up a mill' (p. 133), and later, in securing the Grange lease, got with it the Newark Mills (p. 219). Dr Chippingdale, the Bishop of Lincoln's commissary, having succeeded in getting the farm of the Castle Mills, was next, in 1593 (p. 326), in conflict with the town on the subject of his multure. The Earl of Huntingdon's aid was invoked to make him submit to arbitration, and as Dr Chippingdale was shortly to be at the mercy of the corporation when his lease ran out, he probably preferred not to press the point. He wrote that if his son might have a renewal of the lease 'he and I will be as of your company, and serve the public weal as willingly as if sworn of the corporation' (p. 447). The town was at the same time active in redeeming the North Mills, borrowing £100 for this purpose; the Twenty-four and Forty-eight paid the interest, and the windmill in the South Field was also bought for the town (p. 298). In the next reign the North Mills were inhibited and the unsettled question of multure was reopened2.

On the question of the Duchy ovens the corporation took another line; the bakers who baked at the Duchy ovens attacked those who used private bakeries so as to injure the trade of the craft of bakers, and the council supported the professional bakers. The old law which compelled the burgesses to bake in their lord's oven was appealed to in 1599 (p. 354) by certain bakers who brought the test case before the Duchy court. No claim was made that persons baking for their private consumption must bake at the public oven, and the question was whether a 'common victualler' might bake in his own house pies, pasties, and spiced bread which were not consumed by his guests but sold to other persons. The matter was at first settled on the understanding that the defendant might bake spiced bread and cake at home, in such quantity as the Mayor and Twenty-four should license, but he might bake no ordinary bread at home (for sale); eventually however it was decided to bring 'spiced bread' under the assize of bread, and to require baking in the common oven if it were baked for sale.

Weights and Measures. The records contain a full account of the methods by which the central government sought to control local weights and measures. The Act of 2 Henry VII, c. 4 had arranged the distribution in every borough of common balances, with common weights, and of measures, marked at the Exchequer, which were to be used as standards1. Nevertheless in 1511 the list of the borough weights and measures which were kept at the hall shows that the town was ill supplied with standards. There was only one broken (brass) measuring rod, a brass gallon, a 'quarter' (28 lbs.2), two 7 lb. weights and three smaller weights. In 1521 it was agreed to fetch from London the standards which were missing (p. 17), and another list (p. 67) shows that in 1551 the borough had a better supply. In 1577 the borough was amerced for using a false strike (p. 173), and, soon after, the Queen's clerk of the market complained of the 'insatiable greatness' of the local bushel. There were two bushel measures in the corporation's keeping, it would seem; one was of brass, of date 12 Henry VII, having the portcullis and greyhound, and correct. This was restamped with an E and crown in 1602. But the standard bushel used in the market-place was of wood (p. 209) and was too big by a pottle (2 quarts) (p. 170). Repeated visits from the clerk of the market and warnings from the Privy Council passed unheeded; the bushel in actual use was always too large (pp. 209, 404). Similarly the borough had a standard gallon measure of brass, which only needed restamping in 1602, but the gallon which was in actual use for the borough standard was too large. After the clerk of the market's visit the size of the gallon seems to have been reduced, but in 1582 it was increased to its old size by a bylaw (p. 191). In 1602 new royal standard quarts and pints of brass were provided, after repeated warnings from the Privy Council.

In 1578 the brass yard wand was found by the clerk of the market to be too long. It had been broken and pieced with tin at one end. Henceforth both ends of all yard wands were to be sealed. The wine quart was found too small (it had been fetched from London in 1577-8) (p. 173), for it was smaller than the ale quart, a custom allowed to Londoners only, for which they paid 100 marks a year (p. 176).

By a proclamation of Elizabeth, 16 Dec. 1587, the borough was required to purchase at the Exchequer complete sets of troy and avoirdupois weights, great and small, and with carriage 'by land and water,' they cost the borough £10. 7s. 8d. (p. 245).

By paying a 10s. fee to the clerk of the market the corporation sometimes sought to escape his interference (p. 288). But the town council, so lax in assisting the Exchequer authorities in their efforts to secure equality of measures throughout the kingdom, was firm in administering its own bylaws, suppressing pint and peck 'ostrey' measures of straw (p. 61), examining and sealing (pp. 61–2), forbidding the use of 'black pots' and mugs (p. 194), and requiring the use of sealed pewter pots in ale-houses (pp. 181, 184).

Sanitation. The number of bylaws under this head is not large. In 1557 (p. 86) it was forbidden to cast into the Soar or its branch river any weeds or filth, or to wash entrails there, or near where any 'burne' was taken up, that is, where the brewers drew their water. There are numerous rules as to the laying of muck in appointed places (pp. 103, 133, 329), and part of the fine for disobedience went to the informant. Owners of uninhabited houses were reminded (p. 191) of their duty to see to the cleaning of the streets in front of their houses, and to the weekly carrying away of the filth, muck and garbage, under a penalty of 3s. 4d. In 1588, after the corporation had secured the Grange lease, it was agreed to have a scavenger for the town who should carry all manure to the Grange tenants. Every householder was required twice a week to lay the manure in the streets, and was forbidden to sell it or give it to strangers, or to lay it on his private 'back-sides' or lands.

The town wells were occasionally cleaned at the expense of the town by order of the council; those at St Martin's Church, the High Cross and St Margaret's Church gate are mentioned in 1559. In 1584 the common wells were ordered to be kept in repair by the inhabitants of the ward or quarter in which they lay, and the aldermen were required to appoint well-reeves. In 1578 the washing of clothes at the common wells had been prohibited, not for the first time (II. p. 291).

In 1564 (p. 110) the first bylaws were made to cope with an outbreak of the plague<sup>1</sup>. Two months were to elapse after a death before those in the house that was stricken might wander among the 'clear.' The penalty was a fine of £5 or loss of the freedom of the borough. In 1593 (p. 295) the 'visited' houses were kept at the expense of the town in food, drink, fire, candle, water, and soap, and watched over by 'keepers' (p. 112); furthermore 20 watchmen were put on duty in aid of the aldermen and constables. In appealing for aid to the county, the number of dead was put at 107.

Pavements. The householder's duty of repairing the pavement in front of his house was brought to his notice by bylaws when a visit from the Queen was anticipated, and in 1575 the aldermen of wards were called on to see the work done, as well as to enforce an order for the 'repairing, amending and beautifying of the fore part and fore front' of every house, in readiness for the royal visit. Municipal responsibility for the state of the pavements was accepted at that time only for the 'common grounds,' that is for the pavements which bordered corporation property. The Chamberlains were to repair these at the town's charge, but for the mending of the highways the inhabitants of each ward were called upon to find a labourer for one day, and the labourers were to be ordered by the Mayor and Chamberlains to gather stones, dig and carry sand, and repair 'any common ways that the chamber (or treasury) is charged with.'

Bridges. The town had a large number of bridges and the cost of repair fell sometimes on the members of the two Companies (p. 149). In 1589 it was petitioned that the charter should contain a clause granting the profits of the borough court to the repairs of ways and bridges. The repairs of ways and bridges are entered occasionally on the borough accounts. In 1574 surveyors were appointed to superintend the building of a new bridge (p. 150).

Water-supply. In 1558 there was a scheme for making a conduit (p. 92), and when the Queen made her grant of St Peter's Church in 1573 it was planned that the surplus proceeds, if there were any, should go to make a conduit (p. 139). In 1586–7 there is mention of the repair of the conduit-head in St Margaret's Fields (p. 241), but that the town water-supply was inadequate is shown by the fee paid for 'searching for water at the top of the hill towards Knighton' (p. 369).

Licensing system. Brewers and ale-house keepers were at the beginning of the period subject to the same kind of municipal regulation as the bakers and tallow-chandlers; the assize of beer fixed the price of beer according to the price of malt, as the price of wheat and tallow fixed the assizes of bread and candle. Bylaws were issued on the subject of the quality of the beer provided, and bylaws were issued similarly on the quality of the bread, the interest of the poorer members of the community being urged as the cause of several regulations. The bakers were required to make one half the batch of bread of 'farthing bread,' and were required to bake rye-bread for the poor, mixed with bran in proportion according to the 'old law' (p. 16, see II. p. 288). Similarly the brewers were repeatedly enjoined to make 'good wholesome drink' for the poor people at 1/d. a gallon, for instance in 1520, and later at 1d. a gallon, when it was called 'penny drink' (p. 327). When the use of hops began, a closer classification and specialization of the brewing industry followed. The beer was stronger, drunkenness commoner, and a sense of the necessity of controlling this trade grew in the minds of national and local legislators. In 1523 the Leicester brewers had been forbidden to follow the newfangled practice of using hops; three years before, they had been bidden to make their ale 'mighty of the corn,' with an insinuation probably against hops1. In the reign of Henry VIII the 'common brewers' are referred to with the feminine pronoun (p. 33), but when a 'brewers' fellowship' or gild had come into existence (p. 153) and the processes of brewing had been elaborated, it is probable that the trade passed completely out of the hands of women and became more definitely a profession.

The ales were classified under the assize according as they were new (ale under the sieve) or stale; to prevent the making of excessively strong ale, a top price was fixed for the stale, 'how strong or heady of the malt so ever the same may be' (p. 330). The brewers were ordered to repress strong ale (in 1584, p. 199), by means of their ordinal or code of trade rules, and complaint was made of the 'filthy drunkenness and great disorder by reason of the strong drink' made in Leicester (p. 208). It had early been ordered that retailers must give bread gratis when selling strong ale (p. 33). In 1574 the licensing of new breweries was left with the Mayor and 'ancientest of the comburgesses' (p. 153); but there was a tendency to allow wholesale traders to set up without license. This was taken advantage of, till in 1599 (p. 383) all new breweries set up within a given period were ordered to be suppressed; henceforth no one was to be allowed to set up as a common brewer except by license of the Mayor and aldermen or a majority of them.

No brewer might sell by retail: and retailers were in their turn forbidden to brew any ale for sale (p. 153). This facilitated the operations of the ale-tasters, who made their inspection at the breweries.

The retail traders, 'tipplers,' or ale-house keepers, had been brought under a system of inspection by means of the statutes against gambling. In each ward it was the duty of the alderman to inspect the ale-houses (p. 242), and occasionally the council appointed other inspectors with power to enter at any time (p. 293). necessity of suppressing a number of ale-houses throughout the country had been acknowledged by the Privy Council and by Parliament; in 1571 the Council of the North was ordered to put down 'superfluous' ale-houses, and again in 1587 the Oueen's Council ordered suppression. There was no offer of compensation. Leicester the Mayor's oath in 1594 (p. 302) contained a clause binding him to the suppression of ale-houses, and in 1597 the Justices of Assize, at the instance of the Queen and Lord Chancellor, addressed the Mayor of Leicester and required a list of ale-houses, with a view to the suppression of such as were unnecessary and ill-ordered (pp. 330-1). In 1586 the number of innkeepers and taverners in Leicester was returned as 73 (p. 231).

The closing hour in the winter months (Sep. 29—March 25) was fixed, as in London and elsewhere, at 9 o'clock, when the curfew tolled. Keepers of ale-houses where any customers were found after the bell had ceased were to have fourteen days' imprisonment and be fined as well (p. 74). Strangers in inns alone were exempted from this rule. This act was reissued in 1583 (p. 193) in a slightly modified form.

In 1562 (p. 174) victuallers who kept open doors in service time on Sundays or on feast days were fined, 'common innkeepers only except'; and in 1578 the order for the closing of all ale-houses was extended to Wednesday, Friday, Sunday, and feast days, 'in time of sermons, divine service, catechising, and such godly exercises,' viz. 8–11 a.m., and on Sundays and holidays also in the afternoon, during 'godly exercise.' The keeper of the house and the persons there found were alike punishable by fine or imprisonment: in 1580 the amount of the fine was left to the discretion of the Mayor, with the option of imprisonment. 'Strangers in their travel and for their lawful recreation' might be served at all times. Retail traders were for-bidden to refuse to serve buyers who wished to consume the beer off the premises (pp. 162, 170).

It was further attempted to control the amount of time an individual might spend without interruption at a single ale-house. In 1563 (p. 108) a bylaw called attention to the 'unthrifty persons who sit and tipple, at such time as they ought by God's law and the laws of the realm to be otherwise occupied, whilst their wives and families starve at home.' Town-dwellers who were householders were forbidden to 'use any such drinking,' the householder and innkeeper being alike punishable. 'If any will drink ale or beer, let them send for it home to their own houses and there drink in due order and at convenient time, one neighbour with another' (p. 109). The Leicester law of 1563 forbade drinking in any company for longer than one hour (p. 108), and this was re-enacted (p. 174), but later on the law was that townsmen might not sit drinking together at inns, though they might do so with strangers (p. 353). A statute of 1 James, c. 9, followed the example of this local legislation, making it unlawful to sit in an inn for more than an hour at dinner-time on workdays, and a proclamation of 1618 ordered the justices of the peace to deal with 'continued drinking' on similar lines1. In 1563 the Leicester council made a 'black-list' of common drunkards (p. 108), and ordered the frankpledge juries in 1569 to 'present' these offenders (p. 128). During the fair-times the whole system of licensing laws, early closing, and the rest, was allowed to lapse.

Sunday observance. As early as 1467 (II. p. 295) men had been forbidden to carry water for brewing purposes on Sundays: in 1523 (p. 25) the law was re-enacted, but an exception was made in favour of 'reasonable cause.' The penalty was imprisonment. In 1562 (p. 102) butchers were forbidden to sell meat on Sunday after 7 a.m. until divine service was over, and millers and corn-carriers were forbidden to carry malt or meal on Sunday till after evening prayer was over 'in all or most' parish churches.

Amusements. The excellent collection of extracts from the Leicester records which Kelly gave in his Notices of Leicester renders superfluous here any summary of the entries in the following pages. He has called attention to 'the play that was in the church' (p. 70), to the 'one that played alone' (p. 102), the Coventry and Hull players, the players out of Wales, the dancing-house (p. 57), the players on ropes at the Cross Keys Inn (p. 264), the dispute between the players of the Master of the Revels and the players of the Earl of lx Politics.

Worcester, to the bylaws against gifts to great persons and their players, jesters, bearwards and other entertainers (except in such cases as the town council sanctioned). He has named the greater number of the companies of actors who are referred to in the town accounts because the council gave fees in addition to what was 'gathered' either at the doors or as a free-will offering1. He has treated of the hopes and fears of the Puritans in the borough on the matter of the suppression of morrice-dancing (pp. 358-9), of the allusions to the then particularly aristocratic sport of cock-fighting, to the harefinder<sup>2</sup> of Whetstone court who was feed by the chamberlains, to Lockwood the royal jester, who adapted himself in turn to the requirements of Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, and last appears in these accounts 1571-2 (p. 137). He has treated fully of the Riding of the George, the dressing of the dragon, the gild of St George and its hall in Holy Rood Lane or St Martin's Church gate (Town-hall Lane) which appears in the account of the corporation lands in 1595.

There may perhaps be an allusion to an old custom of celebrating the coming of spring in the note (p. 29), that hawthorn, beanflowers and a columbine flower were brought to the Mayor (Mar. 27, 1530), in an unusually early season. The bylaw on bough-breaking (pp. 68, 75) was perhaps directed to the repression of May-day decorations<sup>3</sup>.

Politics and sedition. Public interest in foreign politics is indicated by the fact that in 1525 the capture of Francis I at the battle of Pavia was celebrated by a bonfire and a 'triumph' at Leicester. The Armada, however, came and went without leaving much mark upon the town accounts beyond the cost of the levy of forty soldiers, and perhaps some feasting. In 1596 the town was still trying to recover £20 which had been sent up for the use of the soldiers and on their return should have been restored to the town (pp. 321, 324) by Sir George Villiers.

There was some seditious talk about the King and Anne Boleyn (p. 31) by one who was dissatisfied with both the central and the local authorities; and there were people who ventured to gossip about Merlin's prophecies, in spite of the statute against prophecies (5 Eliz. c. 15). Kelly has given a full account of the examination of the accused persons<sup>4</sup>, and Thompson has quoted the examination of one who spoke in praise of Anthony Babington, Mary Queen of Scots' supporter. Thompson too has reported the case of the carrier who carried books against the Act of Uniformity, 'tending to the alteration of the discipline of the Church,' books which went too far in reformation on the one hand, and on the other, the case of the aged and poor Walter Barlow, a vagrant papist and priest, who continued in prison though he took the oath of allegiance. William Poole, who had committed the error of not praying for the Queen, was discharged (p. 196). In 1599 a gentleman was accused of speaking ill of the Queen's ministers, saying 'the Cecils would have all' (p. 366). There were also times when men ventured to complain of the acts of the Mayor and his brethren, though such complaints were punishable by the persons complained of, or by such of them as were justices of the peace.

Morals. In the annual accounts there are in almost every year entries on the 'carting' and whipping of offenders, male and female. The 'papers' or frontlets which were worn by the offender, describing the nature of the offence, were charged on the borough account. The examinations before the justices give the bastardy cases and cases of adultery etc. (cf. p. 344) but they are not numerous. In 1600 the justices' sentence on a woman was that she be carted about the town in a white sheet on Saturday, openly in the open market, and that she stand up before the Gainsborow Chamber in a white sheet for an hour, 11-12 a.m. (the most crowded time); further that on the 'Sabbath day being Sunday' she should present herself in St Martin's Church in the beginning of the sermon, stand up in a white sheet, bare-headed and bare-footed, with a white wand in her hand, acknowledge her fault, and ask God's forgiveness and the people's prayers. One case of witchcraft is recorded (p. 335), but not much detail is given beyond the fact that the supposed witch was hanged.

The Council and the Parishes. The control of the council over parochial matters, a control which in many boroughs can be shown to be of long standing, appears in certain passages in these records. The parochial affairs of St Martin's in particular were specially subject to the council's control, for it was at St Martin's that the council attended divine service. The Mayor's chapel is alluded to below, and the chapel of the brethren appears in St Martin's accounts. In 1510 (p. 2) it was made a bylaw by the council that every Mayor must 'take account' for the Church of St Martin's during his year of office, and the churchwardens' accounts, published by North, show that the Mayor was aided by the comburgesses, or some of them, in his audit, the vicar and ordinary parishioners being also present. The two Companies aided the 'commoners' of the parish by contributing to the cost of the church', and the Mayor and his brethren made bylaws on the subject of the fees to be paid by members of the Companies and commoners for bell-ringing, for refusing the office of churchwarden and the like; these laws are all recorded not in the borough records, but in the book of the churchwardens.

Mention has already been made of the question of the union of St Peter's parish with All Saints' or St Martin's, which came before the town council in 1591 (p. 271). An instrument, seen in the parish chest of All Saints' by Throsby², shows that it was the 'Mayor and burgesses' (no doubt the Mayor and two Companies) who at an earlier date had granted to the vicar of All Saints' letters patent which allowed him to hold that living and St Peter's living jointly for life. The Bishop of Lincoln, the diocesan, consented to a union of the parishes in 1590, and next the question of permanent union came before the council of the borough in 1591. Though there was believed to be a majority for union with All Saints', the matter, so far as the borough records tell the council's story, was not then finally decided. The Queen's consent to union was given in 1594.

Population. As in many other boroughs, the decay of the town, its poverty, its reduced population, its ruinous tenements, were matters lamented repeatedly by those who described the state of Leicester in the sixteenth century. In 1540 it was stated that for forty years past the high street had been going to ruin, and that other parts of the town lay desolate. In 1587 there was a minute enquiry into the number of houses, owing rent to the Duchy, and in need of repairs (p. 239). A jury of masons, plasterers and others reported 235 houses 'in decay' and 406 'bays<sup>3</sup>' 'wasted'; the total cost of repairs was put at £5000 and more. If the jury swore truly, the state of the town was so lamentable that the occasional visits of the 'saltpetre man,' much dreaded by the town council, can have added but little to the sum total of discomfort. The saltpetre man had power to throw down the mud walls in common seisin (pp. 221, 254, 264), to take up the town-hall floors, and make salt-petre out of this earth impregnated with animal matter. The gunpowder industry was not started in England under conditions favourable to its general popularity.

The population was called 4000 (p. 234) in about 1589<sup>1</sup>: 600 men presented themselves at the general muster of 1580. A dole in 1584 was administered to 818 poor persons. In 1593 the number of poor persons not visited by the plague was put at five or six hundred. Those who complained of decreased population believed it was due to the fact that foreigners enjoyed too large a share of Leicester's privileges, while the burden of taxation fell with disproportionate weight on the resident townsmen.

The Records. There are many entries on these pages which show that much care was taken in preserving the records, and that on several occasions they were searched for legal purposes. Historical researches in connexion with borough law-suits were sometimes pursued at the Tower of London, then the national Record Office, and the copies made of MSS. in London have been carefully kept at Leicester ever since. The good order in which the manuscripts were kept was due to the energy and orderly habit of William Dethick, town clerk to the borough during a period of nearly half a century. The minutes of the council meetings in Elizabeth's reign regularly bear his signature. His relationship to the famous Garter Kingat-arms of the same name has not been ascertained.

The chief sources of the present volume are the Hall Books I, 1467—1553, II, 1553—1586, III, 1586—1707, which contain the council minutes and the lists of officers annually elected. Some entries of annual occurrence, such as the assizes of bread, beer, and candle, the appointment of constables, or of keepers of posthorses, and formal documents concerning the subsidy, have been omitted after a specimen has been given. The recognizances of debt, and bonds of good behaviour, which are found in Hall Book I, have been wholly omitted. The lists of entries of the Chapman's Gild have not found space in the present volume.

The Town Book of Acts, still in its original binding, contains copies of the more important documents in the Hall Books, carried down to 1573. It is sometimes referred to as the 'great paper book' or 'register' (pp. 67, 147).

A quantity of loose papers have been bound together in volumes called the Hall Papers. Volumes I, 1583—90; II, 1591—1600; III, 1600–5 have been used. These papers formed originally what was called the 'Mayor's file,' to which allusions are often made below. Some of the papers are holograph letters, others are copies of letters despatched from Leicester, some are corrected drafts of letters and petitions, some are the rough minutes of the council, prepared no doubt at the meetings, and afterwards written out in the Hall Book. A mass of the Hall Papers contains the examinations taken before the justices of the peace; of these it has been possible to include only the more important specimens and extracts. They are too irregularly kept to lend themselves well to a calendar.

The Chamberlains' Accounts are complete from 1555-6; after 1589 the accounts were kept in paper books as well as on parchment rolls; the books contain the rough copies, the parchment rolls the fair. The mass of these records is so great that it has not been possible to do more than give the sum of receipt and expense in each year, with extracts of the more interesting particulars; the earlier accounts have been given with some fulness, and the later accounts contain in each year entries of a similar kind. Each account contains an inventory of the plate and goods kept at the town hall, a detailed rental, a building account, and list of fees and courtesies. No system of extracts can satisfy all the needs of the curious enquirer who would seek particulars in this immense collection.

Some of the more valuable papers have been detached in recent times from the Mayor's file and are kept in a Portfolio, known as the Portfolio of Letters. Those of the letters which have not already been given in full by Thompson are printed in full here, and Thompson's letters have been calendared in our text.

The Locked Book contains copies of a mass of conveyances, so numerous that it has not been found possible, owing to exigencies of space, to calendar these as was done in the preceding volumes.

The boxes of detached records are also so numerous that no attempt has been made to calendar all. What seem the more important contents only are printed in full or calendared.

The Easter Book and Terrier of St Mary's College is described on pp. 453-4.

In conclusion I should like to make acknowledgement of the efficient help which I have had from Miss M. Hort (Mrs Chitty) and Miss M. H. Corbett in the work of copying. Mr W. H. Stevenson and Archdeacon Stocks have again been willing to revise the proofs, and I cannot adequately thank them for their generosity.

The present volume closes the first series of Leicester Records.

Parish of St Mary. The patron of this church the Abbot of Leicester as appears "in materculo2" in these words:—

The church of St Mary of the Castle is of the Abbot of St Mary in the Meadow, having it to his own uses with the tithe of sheaves etc.

From the foundation of the canons all except the oblations and obventions which are appointed for the 7 clerks serving there in person etc.

Composition of the vicarage (vicarie). Seek in the book of Parliament<sup>3</sup>. The clerk of this church is instituted and set by the abbot.

We (the abbey) have the tithe of sheaves at the South and West gates by the gift of our founder.

The South gate rendered  $\mathcal{L}_{16}$  now  $\mathcal{L}_{5}$ . The West gate rendered for free entry about  $\mathcal{L}_{5}$ .

In the charter of the ordering of the canons of the church of St Mary of the Castle it is written:—

(As in Nichols II. ii. App. p. 303.) Earl Robert (Bossu's) charter requiring Richard Abbot of St Mary de Pratis to provide eight clerks to serve the Castle church, and fixing their portions down to "promittent etc."

Then as in Mon. Ang. VI. p. 466, No. xvi. paragraphs 1 and 2. Note that William Charity compiled the book whence this is taken 1502, at the age of 81 in the 63rd year after his entry into religion, the 13th after his Jubilee.

A note from the Augmentation Records of 30 Henry VIII that the yearly salary paid to the Vicar was £8.

LVII. Obit in St Margaret's.

Box J, No. 449. [March 20, 1538.] Indenture (English) between Randell Wood Mayor of Leicester of the one part, and Christopher Clough inn-holder, John Holmes baker, Henry Green husbandman, and Tho. Davy shoemaker of the other part. Whereas Margery Thomson widow of Henry Thomson seised the above-named feoffors of lands which she had by her husband's will to keep yearly for ever an obit in the church of St Margaret for the souls of her husband and herself and all Christians, to the value of 10s. 4d., the "dirige" to be done on the Sunday before the Exaltation of the Holy Cross called Holy Rood Day, and mass on the morn, the vicar to have 8d. and other five priests, if there be so many, 4d. each, and to the two parish clerks, 2d. each, and the two children that shall sing versicles at the "dirige" 1d. each, for two "hedmesse pense1," 2d. Also to the Mayor of Leicester 4d. if he is there and offers 1d. Also for four penny tapers to burn at "dirige" and mass time, the same to be had of the vicar, 4d. To the bellman for going about the town 2d. To the church of St Margaret for all the five bells to be rung 2s. To the ringers 1s. 4d. And for the bede roll that the said Henry and Margery may be then prayed for in perpetuity 4d. The residue of the said 10s. 4d. to be divided equally into two parts, one part to be stood in bread, ale and cheese, for those in the choir at the "dirige," the other part to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish by the view of the vicar. To the feoffors for their labours 7s. To the treasury (chamber) of Leicester 1s. Therefore the Mayor binds himself and his successors to agree to these conditions and becomes seised of the lands, to the use of the chamber of the town: the overplus of the rent is to be yearly distributed among the poor of the said parish according to the Mayor's discretion. Sealed with the office of Mayoralty and with the seals of the feoffors.

(Tags for four seals, of which two remain.)

&lt;sup>6</sup> The making of the certificate regulating the wages of servants (and also artificers and labourers) is noted every year from this time. Under the act of 5 Eliz. 4, c. 12, the justices determined the rate of wages, and their assessment was returned to Chancery. Thereupon the Council authorized the assessment by proclamation. On the administration of the statute see Miss McArthur's Regulation of Wages in Eng. Hist. Rev. xv. p. 445. The contention of her paper is borne out by the Leicester Chamberlains' accounts. None of the assessments has been found.

CLXXXV. Commission for Musters.

Box 1 A, No. 515. [Ap. 24, 1573.] Latin letters patent of Queen Elizabeth to Sir George Turpyn, Adrian Stokes Esq., John Heyrick Mayor, Will. Manby, Tho. Stanford, Ric. Davye, John Tatam and James Clark burgesses, appointing them commissioners to muster knights, footmen, archers and "scloppetarii2" between the ages of 16 and 60 and to inspect the array and assign horses and arms and instruments of war, and teach and exercise recruits and those ignorant of military matters the use of horses, arms and warlike apparatus.

With it (English) a direction for the commissioners for the musters in the town of Leicester how they shall proceed in the execution of the said commission from the Privy Council<sup>3</sup>, the commission being "not so proper for the mustering and training of soldiers both on horseback and on foot in cities and towns corporate and other exempt places as in the shires abroad," yet "many of the articles very mete and necessary." A special commission is therefore directed for the mustering and training of all manner of able persons in Leicester, without respect of any persons. Instructions are to be received from the commissioners of the shire, who have them at good length.

[A number of entries in which "co. nar." i.e. a copy of the "narration" or plaintiff's count is asked for, or a "sci. fac." "scire facias" (a writ to shew cause to the court why execution of a judgment should not be made out), or a "cap. ad sat." a "capias ad satisfaciendum," a writ to secure the attachment of the defendant to satisfy the plaintiff's debt, or a "ve. fac." a "venire facias," a writ to cause a jury to come.]

And the aforesaid L. S. on this day offered his answer against W. E. concerning the plea of the aforesaid debt. And he proffers £1. 13s. 4d., part of the £2. 13s. 4d., here in court and craves to wage law concerning the £1 remaining over of the £2. 13s. 4d. at the next court. Therefore it was decided by the court that he should make oath himself and with the sixth hand<sup>3</sup>. And the aforesaid W. E. appoints in his place in the aforesaid plea, to win or to lose, etc. T. L. (his attorney).

At which court come both the aforesaid R. T. and the aforesaid N. C. by their aforesaid attorneys and because it appeared to the court that the form of the plaintiff's count and also that of the aforesaid reply are bad etc. therefore it was agreed that the aforesaid parties shall replead, beginning with the plea of the said R. T.

&lt;sup>1</sup> On paper, folded in book form: in part badly defaced and torn. Extracts only are given: the mass of the entries relate to appearances by attorney, defaults, essoins (excuses), court-days appointed, in pleas of debt and trespass. Debts to any amount were recoverable in this court. This roll is the most detailed of the Elizabethan rolls which are extant. The later examples give no details of the progress of the action, merely a record of its beginning.

CCXXXII. The Master of the Revels¹ and the Earl of Worcester's Players.

Hall Papers I, No. 42. [March 3, 1584.] Certain players, calling themselves servants of the Queen's Master of the Revels asked leave to play and shewed their licence from Edm. Tilney, Master of the Revels, and Geo. Haysell of Wisbech (dated Feb. 6, 1583) ordering the local authorities not to "disorderly intrude" and "presume to show forth any plays, interludes, tragedies, comedies or shows" without E. Tilney's order. Haysel is the chief player.

On March 6 the Earl of Worcester's men denied the authority of the aforenamed players. (The whole is in Kelly's Notices of the Drama in Leicester pp. 211-2).

Ibid. No. 38. The Earl of Worcester's licence to his players (Edw. Allen and others named) dated Jan. 14, 1584, and witnessed by the Mayor of Leicester and others.

The Mayor refused them leave to play on March 6, the time being not convenient, and gave them an angel (10s.). They determined to play at their inn in spite of him, and went with drums and trumpets through the town and contemned the Mayor. They submitted and begged the Mayor not to tell their master, and so on submission were licensed to play at their inn on March 6, making apology, and showing on the stage before the play began that they were licensed. An order in the Duchy between Tusser and others and Worship and others, that Worship and others shall continue possession, will give colour for our possession. If our adversaries move an injunction to remove our possession, this order will give some show to stay him if you can procure favour of Mr Chancellor and Mr Attorney. The Attorney has half promised the same already to Geo. Perkins<sup>2</sup>, who can remind him. Perkins or Mr Okes can tell you with which of Mr Chancellor's men to procure favour. On Mr Recorder's points, use Mr Godfrey's opinion, who is soundly learned.

Box 4 A, No. 3. [Without date.] The concluding portion of a lease from the Queen to Francis Hastings and W. Worship of the Grange and Goslingcroft with tack of animals and pigs pasturing in the Cowhay and South Fields, and the water mill called Newark mills and the holm called Gooseholm with fishing, and the tenement at the corner of the lane in the Southgate leading to the mill and the Swan Land, and the Beadhouse meadow.

Box 9 A, No. 11 (9). Draft of the town's cause for the Closes, addressed to a Lord (the Earl of Huntingdon). Mr Attorney sends information that by law we cannot enjoy the said Close for want of circumstances to have been performed at the "devision" of the said Frith viz. the King's Majesty's special grant made thereof to the Newark, which, if we cannot find, our case is very hard in law. And then we are only to rest on equity and good conscience to have recompense for the common due to the Newark. Before we make open our grief, will his lordship send for Tusser and persuade a composition? Of late we gave his lordship's brother<sup>3</sup> great sums for the closes. For over 72 years these closes have been reputed parcel of the Grange. They came to the Newark in consideration that the College had in the Frith divers pastures, as by a record Tusser (as he said to Archer) can shew. We pay a preacher £20 a year out of the sum (etc.).

CCLXIII. Letter on behalf of a vagrant child.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 9. [Jan. 12, 1586.] Edward Boughton to the Mayor. He is sending to Leicester a child, Edward German, about ten years of age, who came to his house asking relief in August last, and was then almost devoured with lice. He called himself the son of Edward German fletcher of Leicester, a very poor man no way able to relieve him. He was taken in and cured of sundry sores, but fell to wandering in his old manner. The parents have neglected him and suffered him to wander in most ungodly and uncharitable manner where, by better order, he might have been a good member of the commonwealth.

CCLXIV. Royal lease of Leicester and chantry lands.

CCLXV. Privy Council's orders to prevent flesh-eating in Lent3.

Hall Papers I, No. 251. [Feb. 10, 1586.] Greenwich. Orders to bee put in execucion by the Justices of peace in the severall countyes of this realm for the restraint of eatinge and killinge of fleshe in the tyme of Lent and daies prohibited.

First Her Maiesties pleasure is, vnderstandinge the greate disorder heretofore committed in eatinge fleshe as well in the tyme of Lent as in other daies prohibited: That the statute of Anno 5° of her maiesties raigne for restraint thereof bee put in due execucion in all partes of the countrye and in Corporate townes by waye of inquisicion and charge of juries, and by any other goode meanes, to the punishment of the offendours.

And for the better execucion thereof, and of these articles followinge, yt ys thought meete that you doo take order without any delaye, consideringe the tyme presente amongest your selves by divydinge your selves in your severall divicions, to meete duringe the tyme of this Lent once euerye fouretene daies, and to make enquirye accordinglye of the offendours in that behalf. And nowe at your firste meetinge, to agree of all good orders for performance of this necessarye service.

And because a greate parte of this disorder groweth by certaine butchers that kill and sell fleshe in oute howses and other secrett places you shall cause bondes to bee taken to her maiesties vse of all butchers within your severall divicions in suche good sommes as by you shalbe thought convenyent not to kill any fleshe in tymes of restraint; savinge, in the borowe or shire townes, or other good corporate townes, some one maye bee lycensed to kill, for the vse of

That the butchers soe lycensed shalbee firste bounde in the sum of fyftye poundes to Her Majesties vse to kill noe biefes [or] muttons fleshe in the Lent tyme nor other daies prohibited but [only]<sup>1</sup> as shalbe lawfullye lycensed (rest illegible).

That the said Justices and principall officer shall not graunte any warrant to any person or persons but to suche as theye shall knowe to bee sicke and diseased or otherwyse by lawfull aucthorytye lycensed, as they wyll aunsweare at their perill, to the contrarye.

That the saide Justices and principall officer shall keepe notes or registers of all suche warrantes as shalbe then graunted to any persons diseased or lawfully lycensed, conteyninge the names of the persons soe diseased and lycensed, to bee certefied euerye fouretene daies duringe this Lente season to the Custos Rotulorum of the countye or to his deputye, whiche certeficate the saide Custos shall sende vpp to the Lords and others of Her Majesties Counsayle.

That the said butchers so lycensed shall everye fourtene daies with the privitye of the principall officers of the towne, certefie to the Justices of that divicion where they shall bee soe lycensed, whatt sorte, quantety or kinde of fleshe they dooe kyll weekelye and that especyally they bee inhibited not to kill any lambes, for any respecte, consideringe the great losse of sheepe this present yeare in the moste parte of the realme.

That the said Justices and principall offycers shall take order that the butchers shall vtter their fleshe at reasonable pryces to bee soe dyrected by the Justices.

That the said Justices within their seuerall diuicions and all principall officers of townes corporate shall presentlye vppon the receipte of these orders take bandes<sup>2</sup> of all inholders, table keepers, victuallers, taverners, and alehouse keepers in suche sommes as by them shalbe thoughte meete, that they shall not kill nor dresse any fleshe in their howsses, or vtter any in the tyme of Lent, or other dayes prohibited for any respecte, excepte it bee for suche person or persons as lye and lodge in their housses and shalbe lycensed vnder twoo or three of the Justices handes, in respecte of sicknes or other necessary cawses to eate fleshe.

Ibid. No. 211. As I was in comonycation with Edward Sawford of thinges which I had red in books as cronicles and [of] the reward of iniquitie and other such like both pleasant and good to pase the tyme withal. He told me that he had red the boke of King Arthur which he said was a pleasant boke of fables as ever he red in his lyfe. Then began to talke of Marlyn saying that he was a man that had foretould many thinges to com yea even to the worlds end. The which I hearing. I desired to know what this Marlyn was and what he had sayd. The aforesayd Edward Sawford sayd that Marlyn lyved in King Arthurs days and also foretould King Arthur his death which also came to pase: ferther that this Marlin was as it were a congerer and loved a lady to whom he taught his science and yet this lady loved him not and by the same connyng that she had learned of him she inclosed him into a stone and thus the sayd Marlon dyed. These words being ended I asked Edward Sawford what Marlyn had foresayd of thinges to come, sayth he, 3that there should be a man and his boy at the plow and there should a man clothed in black and bare head run over the feeld, and that the boy sping4 him should say, "Master, Lo! where reneth a man in black. I think he be a preest": then his maister should say "Com let vs go and kil him for it is they that hath put this world to this stay as it is"; forthermore that cloobs and clooted showes 5 should rise: and also that there should be an ould man lying on a hil after the trobles past behoulding the world and should wish him yong agayne, that he myght be a partaker of the goulden days to cum: ferther that there should be many that should seeke the death of our noble Queene but none should preveale nor abridge her days, but that she should lyve tyl God should otherwyse cal her. And in soe doinge the same wilbe a moste honorable and perpetuall rememberance of your moste excellente majestie to continewe in all ages hereafter and procure to your sayde towne greate comforte and relief for all the inhabitantes of the same, wherebye they shalbe moste bounde, earnestlye (as they daylye doe) to praye to God, for the longe preservation of your majestie in all healthe and felicitie, etc.]

Box 9 A, No. 1. Another draft of the above in different form. Tells of the 30 parishes and 12 wards reduced to 6 parishes and 10 wards. "And whereas there be remayning in your Majesties possessions since the dissolucion of the late Colledges, Chauntries and Gyldes within and now adjoyning to the said towne divers houses to the nomber of 200 in greate ruyne and decaye scituate in the moste frequent streetes of the same, the fynes whereof to your Majestie be soe smale, the tenauntes soe poore and your Majesties wooddes and tymber nere thereunto in tymes paste so allyened as in tyme for wante of due reperacion they muste of force fall downe to the grounde, whereby bothe your highnes said rentes shall decaye and your said towne be greatlie defaced." The corporation contribute to their small ability to the maintenance of the poor, and at their own expense have built the free grammar school, "and not having lands of above £20 by the yere be altogether unable to sett upp or erecte any trade of clothing" (and then the sentence given above in square brackets).

Then follows:—Your Maior and Burgesses of Leicester (for the better relief of foure thowsande your loving subjectes) be humble sutores to your majestie for the fee farme of all suche landes and parcelle as they nowe holde of your highnes by lease vnder the sealle of the Duchie of Lancaster either in their owne names or by assignement from others, viz.:—

The sheep pens in the markett place and one tenement or ferme adioyning or nere the saide towne, parcell of the late dissolved Colledge of the Newarke. And those cottages and parcell of lande sometyme belonging to the late dissolved Guylde of Corpus Cristi in the said towne.

- (1) Item to have yerelie election of a bayliffe to be joyned to the said Corporacion for thexecucion of processe within the liberties of the saide towne, whiche bayliffe shall collecte all suche your majesties rentes there, as the bayliffe nowe is charged with (withoute fee after the deathe of the nowe bayliffe) there, by whiche your majestie shall be discharged of the yerelie fee of fyve poundes allowed to the saide bayliffe for the same. In consideracion whereof itt maye please your majestie to graunte the butchers shambles lying within the markett place of your saide towne.
- (2) Item that itt maye please your majestie to renewe their auncient charter of the saide towne, with addicion of the saide bayliffe to be joyned vnto their saide corporacion, and that they maye pleade and be ympleaded by the name of Maior, Bayliffe and burgesses and that itt maye be a countie within itt self, for the better ease and tryall of contraversies of your subjecttes within the saide towne.
- (3) Item that within the parrishes of Sainte Margarettes and St Maries in the saide towne, your Maior and burgesses maye be aucthorized to exercise suche jurisdiccion as lawfullie they maye and have used to do within the residue of the parrishes of the said towne.
- (4) Item that by the name aforesaide they maye be of capasitye to purchase landes to the value of one hundred markes yerelie.
- (5) Item that they maye have Leetes, vewe of francke pledge twice in the yere, and the proffittes thereof with all casualties, fynes, amerciamentes, proffittes of courtes as are yerelie accompted for to your Majestie within your saide towne towardes the repayring of the highe waies and bridges, and avoyding annoyaunces in and aboute the saide towne: yelding suche rente for the same as hathe byn answered for the moste yeres of twentie yeres.
- (6) Item that the Mayor, Justices of peace and Aldermen maye be commissioners for musters within the said parrishes.
- (7) Item that your subjectes be not compellable to appear and be ympaunelled but onelie before your highnes Maior of your saide towne and justices of peace there, excepte in case of treason.
- (8) Item that the Maior maye be enabled to prove willes within the saide towne and parrishes, and to take bandes for the true answering of orphantes goodes.
- (9) Item if itt maye stande with your highnes pleasure your Mayor and burgesses of your saide towne will be contente to take to fee farme all the housses, landes and tenementes in the fore saide towne and parrishes, with certen other smale parcelles lying withoute the saide towne to the value of eight poundes or there aboutes, being within the colleccions of George Tatam, Archer, Holte, Harvie, Wylde, Tatam, Singleton and others, parcell of the late dissolved Colledges and Chauntries in Leicester. As also the towne dytche and ruynouce wall of your saide towne, and to be bounde to paye vnto your highnes and successors the rentes of the same as they nowe be or have beene within twentie yeres paste, and discharge your highnes of all reperacions, to the intente your saide towne shall goe noe further in ruyne and decaye.

(10) And that your highnes pleasure herein signified maye be a sufficient warrant to the chauncellor and councell of your duchie, to make a booke readie to your majesties signature accordinglie, and that this booke so signed by your highnes maye be the like warrant as well to the Lorde Chauncellor of Englande, for the tyme being to passe this vnder the greate seale of Englande, as to the Chauncellor of your duchie of Lancaster to passe theise vnder your duchie seale according to your moste gracious pleasure.

Box 9 A, No. 2. (Another draft of the same petition. The opening as above. The clauses of the petition are:—)

Your Maior and burggesses of the towne of Leicester for the better relief of foure thowsands your lovinge subjects be humble sutors to your majestic for the fee farme of all suche Chauntrie landes as are mencioned in a perticular hereunto annexed and referred by your majestic to be considered by the right honorable Mr Secretarye Walsingham whoe hath accordinglic considered the same.

Item itt maye please your majestie to renewe their auncient Charter with wordes sufficient that your saide Maior and burgesses by the same name maye pleade and be impleaded and purchasse lande to suche yeirelie value as to your majestie shall seeme good and further to vse and execute all suche jurisdiccion and aucthoritie as to justices of peace belongeth and otherwise within the parishes of St Margarettes and St Maries, as lawfullie they maye and have vsed to doe within the residue of the parrishes of the said towne.

(Then follow articles as above, i.e. those numbered  $1^{-1}$ , 6, 7, 8, and 10.)

Box 9 A, No. 3. [Another copy in Box 9 A, No 11 (2).] Most humblie sheweth unto your Highnes your obedient and faiethfull subjects the Maior and burgesses of the towne of Leicester where they have beene of long tyme humble sutors unto your Majestie for the fee farme of divers houses and other landes the greatest parte being 200 cottages or tenements and but candle rents1 within the saide towne, parcell of divers chauntries, nowe in greate ruyne and decaye, being your highnes duchie of Lancaster: the consideracion whereof your Majestie referred to your Highnes Chauncellor of your duchie, whoe accordinglie by all due and circumspecte meanes dealte therein (as by his cirtificat under his hand hereunto annexed more at large appeareth: Maye it therefore please your most excellent Majestie of your accustomed goodnes and grace (in consideracion of the greate ruyne the said towne is like to fall into) to graunte to your said Maior and burgesses for the better maintenaunce of your highnes saide towne the premisses considered by your Majesties chauncellor of your highnes duchy whiche as it noe waye conteyneth a diminucion but rather an assuerd contynuaunce of your highnes auntient and usuall revenues with the dischard(g)ing or disbordening of your highnes of certaine fees and reparacions amounting yearelie to the somme of £13. 18s. 8d. or thereabout soe will the same be a moste honorable and perpetuall remembraunce of your moste excellente Majesties princely bountie towardes the saide towne...(concludes with clause 10 as above).

Box 9 A, No. 11 (3). (Draft petition to the Queen. Begins as Box 9 A, No. 1, and asks for the renewal of the old charter with words sufficient to enable the Mayor and Burgesses to plead and be impleaded and purchase lands to such yearly value as may seem good to H.M. and to exercise all the jurisdiction that belongs to a Mayor and Burgesses, as hitherto exercised.

Divers decayed houses belonging to the late colleges, chantries and guilds, the college of St Mary, the hospital of St John and St Leonard, St Margaret and the town obit lands and Corpus Christi Gilds and yearly rents £114. Os.  $1\frac{1}{4}d$ .

The Grange farm with mill £32. os. 6d.

Sheep pens, drapery, shambles and market stalls, a tenement with a horse mill and certain common bakehouses and small rents improved of the waste £23. 19s.  $10\frac{1}{2}d$ , and concludes with clause 10.)

Endorsed "This peticion altered."

Box 9 A, No. 11 (4). Begins as Box 9 A, No. 1. The Mayor and burgesses are suitors for the fee farm of all lands they now hold of H.M. by lease under the Duchy seal, either in their own names or by assignment from others, one market house called the Shambles excepted, which till of late years was in the Corporation's holding.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Originally perhaps rents due to chantries, gilds, etc. to maintain altar-lights, but ultimately used for rents from house-property in general.

1. The shambles, sheep pens and the Newark Grange.

- 2. A cottage and land formerly of the dissolved college and gild of Corpus Christi.
  - 3. Clause I of Box 9 A, No. 1.
- 4. The fines, amercements and profits of the Court called the Mayor's Court, with all the casualties accounted by the bailiff, for a rent such as has been paid in any one of the last 20 years.
- 5. To renew the charter adding the bailiff to the corporation, to allow all the old jurisdiction and privileges in the parish of St Margaret's, St Mary's and all the other parishes, except the seat of H.M.'s Castle, and the seat of the late college of the Newark.
  - 6. To have power to purchase lands to £100 yearly.
  - 7. To have return of writs and a county court monthly.
- 8. To have leets, view of frankpledge twice a year, and the profits to the repair of highways.

9-11. Clauses 6-8 of Box 9 A, No. 1.

12. Incorporation by the name of Mayor and burgesses.

Box 9 A, No. 11 (5). Another similar draft shewing No. 11 (4) converted into No. 1.

Box 9 A, No. 13 (6). Petition draft as Box 9 A, No. 1: adds that Leicester is on the way to Berwick and London. The inhabitants intend to provide for maintenance of clothing, preachers and free instruction of children and the building of a convenient house for such as shall be visited to inhabit during the time of such visitation.

The Corporation has only £20 worth of land a year. Divers godly and well-disposed persons seeing so godly a platform already devised and begun would extend their charities.

The Mayor and burgesses ask for the ancient part of the town in fee farm, now in the collection of the bailiff, for an annual rent such as has been paid in the 20 years (corr. from 3 or 4 years) past.

Jurisdiction in exempt parts of parishes.

The clause asking for the whole town in fee farm is cancelled and in the margin "The naming of the whole towne in fee farme wilbe a great thing in shew and take hede how you put it in." A clause naming the efforts of the Earl of Huntingdon for clothing is cancelled and in the margin "You may set what hathe been attempted but name nobody."

Incorporation asked and power to have a common seal as before used.

Out of the 24 burgesses commonly called Aldermen, the Mayor to be chosen by the 24 and 48, as Henry VII ordered.

That the Mayor and 24 Aldermen and 48 comburgesses may elect a bailiff and 2 chamberlains and other officers.

That the Mayor may be Escheator and Clerk of the Market within the town and parishes and none other to exercise that office.

Assize of bread, wine and victuals: return of writs: county court monthly. That the Mayor and Recorder may be of the Quorum and Justices of Gaol Delivery and of the Peace: and have power to take recognizances of statute merchant and "knowledges of deeds and other writings of lands, and †so acknowledged and enrolled in their Guylde Hall to be as effectuall as in any enrolment in the Chauncery (etc.) your Highnes Courts of Record ‡."

The Mayor to have power to prove wills and take bonds for orphans' goods (in the margin "fornicators etc.").

Leets, law days, view of frankpledge twice a year, and the profits thereof towards repair of highways and bridges.

To make laws and ordinances by assent of the 24 and 48 for the good order of the inhabitants.

To have such fines as by them assessed towards relief of the poor and repair of ways and bridges.

A weekly court on Monday for all actions as time out of mind and the profits to the town's use.

The Mayor and aldermen to be commissioners of musters, and † no others to be admitted 4.

Subjects not to be compellable to appear or to be impanelled within or without the town but only before the Mayor and J.P.s there.

No foreign artificers to retail any wares there (except on fair days) before they be free burgesses.

Collectors to be chargeable with all fifteenths, tenths etc. in the town and parishes.

That the inhabitants of the town and parishes be free burgesses of the town.

CCLXXVII. Archer's negociations for the reconstitution.

Hall Papers I, No. 253. [July 12, 1587.] He asks the Mayor for instructions. Ibid. No. 254. July 17. Same to same on Anthony Culverwell's loan of £100. "I am now to attend at the cowart of Teballs!."

Ibid. No. 255. July 23. Same to same. Has been twice before the Chancellor but can have no "resolute" answer. He seems to purpose to grant a commission to get information of the state of the town. He thought a fee farm to be very much² but a lease of 60 years to be reasonable for us. The Earl of Huntingdon promises to do his best for us.

Ibid. No. 258. July 28. The same to the same. He will act as directed.

CCLXXVIII. Commission of enquiry into the houses of the late Gilds.

Hall Papers I, No. 257. [July 30, 1587.] Francis Hastings, Edw. Stanhope, surveyor of the lands parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster beyond Trent, Will. Agard, particular receiver of our honour of Tutbury, Francis Beaumont deputy steward of the crown lands in Leicestershire, Geo. Purefey and Roger Bromley, deputy receivers of the same, are to have authority to examine witnesses and perambulate etc. to discover decays in tenements that belonged to the late colleges, hospitals, gilds and chantries in Leicester and ascertain what timber is needed for repairs.

Hall Papers I, No. 261, and Box 9 A, No. 11 (6). [Oct. 3, 1587.] Result of the enquiry of the commissioners. (See Thompson's Leicester p. 283.) They summoned 18 masons, plasterers etc. to go and search and make presentment as a jury. They find 235 houses in decay.

That buildings, commonly called bays of houses, with the timber, plaster and slates are wasted—406, at the rate of £6 a bay=£2436.

To rebuild each bay would take 8 tun of timber—with carriage 10s. a tun =  $f_1$ 1624.

Four tun of timber would scarce repair each of the 235 houses in decay = £465.

Carriage of wood from H.M.'s wood at Hinckley £598, at 3s. 4d. a tun.

Total cost of repairs f, 5123. 6s. 8d.

Some who hold leases for 10 years probably ought to do their own repairs, but we cannot ascertain this certainly as the lessees will not deliver to us their estates and charges thereby.

The tenants-at-will do not stand charged with repairs.

For yearly repairs of houses that are still in good condition, they cannot name a sum with accuracy, but think £390, the sum reported to have been spent in H.M.'s first year, would be approximate.

Collectors and bailiffs or fermors who have carried away decayed timber should be charged to find repairs. Many are now dead. The court of the Duchy chamber may best decide what to do in this matter. Building materials are priced so high and the tenants are so poor that they will scarcely be able to be charged with repairs.

The Commissioners certify of their own knowledge that H.M.'s tenements standing in the face of the chiefest streets that are fallen into ruin and decay are a great defacing of the town (rest torn away).

Box 9 A, No. 13 (5). [Aug. 22, 1587.] The names of the jurors sworn to enquire into decays: i.e. 6 shoemakers, 3 bakers, 1 tanner, 3 slaters, 5 carpenters, 3 tailors, 1 mason, 1 victualler, 1 weaver.

Box 9 A, No. 14. Draft Petition to the Queen (undated). "There hath growne unto your Majestie very small fynes or none at all as by the saide certificat dothe appeare." By granting the petition H.M.'s ancient and usual revenues will be increased. Her bounty will be remembered in all ages hereafter and will procure the town great comfort and relief. ## CCLXXXIV. Charter of Elizabeth (translation1).

Roll 663* and Box 9 A, No. 5 (a copy). [Feb. 17, 1589.] Elizabeth by the grace of God Queen of France and England Defender of the Faith etc. to all to whom these our present letters come, greeting. Know that, for the inward affection which we have and bear to our borough and town of Leicester in our county of Leicester, situated and lying in the midst of our realm of England, which is a populous and ancient town, parcel of our Duchy of Lancaster; and for and in consideration of good, true and acceptable service, done and executed before now and from day to day by our good faithful and devoted subjects the Mayors and burgesses of our town of Leicester aforesaid; and at their instance and humble petition; and for and in consideration that the borough and town aforesaid before now from old time was governed and existed corporate by a Mayor and twenty-four honest and lawful men in English called Aldermen, and by another society of forty-eight honest and lawful men in English called the "Companye of Eighte and Fortie," and that the business and services of us and of the public weal were executed from time to time by the Mayor and the societies aforesaid, incorporated by divers most excellent princes progenitors of the kings of England and our ancestors, and so continued till now, and confirmed by us; and further just occasion being laudably had for the preserving and continuing of the foundations and beginnings of the said erection; and because as we understand these beginnings are not found sufficiently firm and valid in law; for the devotion which we bear towards our subjects and for the relief, sustenance and maintenance of our borough and town aforesaid and at the humble supplication of our most dear and faithful subjects the Mayors and burgesses of our borough aforesaid, we have graciously granted that in our said borough there shall be erected, founded and established a body corporate in fact and name by which the men of our borough aforesaid from time to time may be guided and governed.

And we, desiring the general convenience and common utility, have ordered our beloved subjects inhabiting the same borough to be incorporated and erected into one body for ever to endure.

Know ye therefore that we, freely yielding to this pious petition, of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, will, grant and order (the same) for us and our heirs and successors by these presents.

We ordain make and create, and by these presents name, elect, assign, and appoint, that henceforth and for ever in our town of Leicester there shall be a body corporate and politic for ever, consisting of a Mayor and twenty-four Aldermen and forty-eight burgesses chosen from the inhabitants of our aforesaid town, and the said body corporate and politic shall be called and styled and have the name for ever of the Mayor and burgesses of the town of Leicester. And by the same name they shall be persons able and capable in law of having, acquiring, receiving, holding and possessing lands, tenements. liberties, franchises, and hereditaments, to themselves and their successors the Mayors and burgesses of the said town for the time being, in fee and in perpetuity or otherwise at pleasure: also to receive, give, sell, grant, devise or assign the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, and to do all and singular other acts and deeds: and they shall be worthy and able by the same name to plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, answer and be answered, in all manner of courts of us and our heirs and successors, and before all manner of judges or justices and other persons whomsoever in all and singular the actions, pleas, causes, matters and demands of whatsoever nature, kind or species they be, in as ample and beneficial a manner and form as any other the lieges of our queenly person, able and capable in law, or any other bodies corporate and politic within our realm of England are or may be able to acquire, have, receive, give, devise, grant, assign, plead or be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended,—the statutes issued concerning the not putting of lands and tenements in mortmain, or any other statute, act, ordinance, provision or restriction made, issued, ordained or provided before this time, or any other cause, thing or matter whatsoever in anywise notwithstanding.

And further of our special grace and mere motion we will and grant that one of the burgesses of our town aforesaid who shall be one of the society of four and twenty Aldermen shall be yearly, and every year from time to time for ever, elected to the office of Mayor of the said body corporate of our town aforesaid, and shall always be elected to the aforesaid office by the more part of the societies aforesaid in the Guildhall of the said town yearly and every year from time to time for ever on the day of the feast of St Matthew the Apostle. And that our dear subject William Ludlam shall be first Mayor of the body corporate aforesaid and so shall continue exercising, using, enjoying and governing the office of Mayor aforesaid till the feast of St Matthew the Apostle next coming, and that the aforesaid Mayor and burgesses and their successors shall have, enjoy and exercise all and singular the liberties, jurisdictions, franchises, privileges, cognisances of pleas, customs, and power to hold all pleas of whatsoever actions, pleas and demands, and to keep all courts in English called "Le Portmouthe Courte" in the town aforesaid, and in all other things shall be held, treated and governed and under such mode, manner and form in all things as from time to time hitherto they were wont to be used, treated, or to enjoy, within the aforesaid town.

And further the aforesaid Mayor and burgesses of our town aforesaid and their successors shall have hold and enjoy for themselves and their successors all the issues, profits, commodities, emoluments and hereditaments whatsoever, such, so many, and of such nature and in such manner and form as any other Mayor and burgesses or any other body corporate of the said town now have or ever hitherto lawfully had or could have used or enjoyed, anything in our present charter notwithstanding.

And further if from henceforth it shall happen that the Mayor for the time being, shall die during the year of his Mayoralty, we will and grant for us, our heirs and successors, that then the aforesaid societies of the aforesaid four and twenty Aldermen and forty-eight shall unite in one in the Guildhall of the town aforesaid, and so assembled by the more part of the aforesaid societies, the four and twenty Aldermen and "Lez eighte and fortye," within six days after the death of the Mayor thus dying, they shall proceed without delay to the election of the new Mayor in the town, in the manner and form for electing as is aforesaid, and they shall elect a new Mayor and put him into the office of the Mayor.

And further of our more abounding and special grace and of our certain knowledge and mere motion, we give and grant by these presents for us our heirs and successors to the Mayor and burgesses of our town of Leicester aforesaid and their successors all and all manner of tables<sup>1</sup> and shambles within the town of Leicester aforesaid called "Satterdaye Shambles" and "Saint Nicholas Shambles,"

Portfolio of Letters, No. 18. [Feb. 6, 1590.] [R. Parkyns and R. Heyricke to the Mayor.] They have dealt as directed by the Mayor and brethren with Mr Edmunds<sup>1</sup> touching his lease and offered £200 for it. He refused "withe some unkyndnes that we weere so unprovided in so longe tyme and not resolved, his curtesie considered that firste made offer thereof to us, and thus as he saiethe delaied the tyme and frustrate his conceved opinion that we ment to go throughe with him, and nowe hindered his procedinge therein and his chapmen therefore. And he saiethe we should rather have furthered his advauntage for his masters sake who hathe shewed his favor to us in our late sute and delyvered the same to him in lewe of a greate recompenc." The writers modified his determination not to sell to the town. Tatam, Norris, Moreton and the Clarks, "whom I account men of meete affeccion to the towne" and others should be called to consider the matter what detriment it may be to all in Leicester if it come to the hands of a stranger. "And remember how your predecessors have been urged by perverse fellowes and howe youe and youres maie be likewise agayne intreated if it come into a wranglers handling. And that if youe have it, youe maie make meanes in tyme to make it perpetuall to the towne." Edmunds' price is £200, for it is worth more than 100 marks yearly. The writer urges haste "for the factions arre entered so farre to over rule your good men as we will do nothing without warrant. We have receved allredie thankeles recompence for a great endevour

And if youe will do any thing for the gunnepowder man<sup>1</sup>, nowe is the tyme or not at all, and I dare not medle without your assent and warrant, for the kyndnes before shewed and like sequelle."

P.S. The difference in price is 100 marks. It may be dear but "the grete plentie of quyetnes and other incidents thereunto" may make up. "The ferme of the Busshops fee is2 sold in fee simple."

Hall Papers I, No. 300. [Feb. 11, 1590.] The Mayor and burgesses to the Recorder Parkyns. The Recorder's letter was read in a common hall. The conclusion is that Mr Edwards' lease is too high priced for the town to buy as it is greatly in debt. If Edwards will farm it to the town for a year or two on reasonable rent, we will become his tenants and so discover whether it is worth having or not. Thanks are offered to him and Mr Danett for giving the town the first offer. As concerning the saltpetre man it was hoped the Recorder would have considered it. Since his going to London we (received?) H. M.'s proclamations for the calling in and frustrating of all commissions for the making of saltpetre granted before that to Geo. Evelin<sup>3</sup> and others 28 Jan. 1588. We regret that we cannot observe the premises according to the Recorder's expectation and our late determination.

CCCVIII. Archer's Case2.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 22. [May 18, 1591.] R. Parkins to the Earl of Huntingdon. The Earl's letter and Archer's petition have been received. They (the town) are willing to keep their agreement. "There is mystakinge by some of our Companye or by the said Archer touchinge your lordship's meaninge in the order sett doune." Some understand that Archer was to have £200 for his pains in the suit and to enjoy the lease he held of H.M. for 21 years and Archer affirms that in consideration of releasing a bargain he made with "the most part of the commyttees" he should have the fee farm of all those things he held in lease from H.M. worth about £13 a year. As also for loss of time and pains during 4 years and for inserting divers particulars "into our book! for our avail" he says he was to have by the Earl's order the said lease for 21 years and £200 in money, of which at that time he had received £100, and further to enjoy such parcels granted unto him under our common seal by the said first bargain being about £4 a year. And as some of the company did mislike the said bargain made by the commissioners they and Archer referred ourselves to the Earl, and, his order (being) misconceived by some, will the Earl set it down again?

In Hall Papers II, Nos. 19, 22, 24, 26, 29, 30, 31, 33, 35, 37, 38 are further terms of agreement drawn up and not consented to by Archer, with discussion thereon<sup>3</sup>.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 28. [Dec. 1, 1591.] The Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor. From Broadstreet. He repeats his arbitration on Archer's case. He was to have all the parcels of land he then held in lease of H.M. to be passed by the town to him in fee farm. The Earl did not intend to lessen his well-merited reward, whereas the lands he so held were worth about £13 a year, and he then had passed unto him under the common seal £3 or thereabouts yearly in fee farm only and should have had the rest by lease for a term of 21 years, and in consideration of the interest he had by the said agreements in £10 a year more than he holds in fee farm, the Earl ordered the payment of £200 to him of which he has received £100. He will accept it in little parcels of land, or would employ £50 of the money towards setting up of clothing or other public benefit for the town. During life he would reserve this money for the disposing of himself and one other, and on his death give it to the public use.

CCCIX. Poaching in Bagworth Park.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 23. [Sep. 22, 1591.] Sir Edw. Hastings 4 to the Mayor on the reasons why he requested the arrest of Andrew Dale for an assault on the highway. He had letters from the parties that brought the hue and cry and he caused a privy search. The offender also hunted my lord's deer in Bagworth Park. He must be bound over.

Hall Papers II, No. 15. [Oct. 21, 1591.] Letter from an apothecary to Jesson, his brother-in-law, accusing Dale of assault and robbery. "His apparell is browne

&lt;sup>2</sup> The bargain of the Commissioners with Archer is in Box 9 A, No. 11 (7), dated Oct. 19, 1587. Ric. Parkins and others under authority from the Mayor and burgesses grant to Ric. Archer and his son for pains in the town's suit for the fee farm, if successful, that they shall have all they now hold by lease from H.M. so far as the town can grant it. R. and F. Archer covenant to give in exchange any part or all of the land which R. Archer now holds of the Queen in the South Field, in such manner as the same shall be granted and reserved by H.M. to the Mayor and burgesses.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Sir E. Hastings had been made Steward (called also Town Clerk) of Leicester by his father Henry Earl of Huntingdon June 16, 1591: see Box 3 A, No 3. The Earl held the office under a patent of 24 Nov. 9 Eliz.

The examination of Dale follows. Ibid. No. 34, Roger Bromley writes to Sir E. Hastings on Dale's case, on the killing of deer in Bagworth park. In Portfolio of Letters, No. 25, Sir E. Hastings [Oct. 20, 1591] orders Dale, against whom a warrant is out for suspicion of felony, to be "stayed," he being now "within the corporation."

CCCXV. Letters on town business and the Recordership.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 31. [Feb. 22, 1592.] The Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor and brethren, from Nottingham. He has received a note of receipt for coals through Will. Roe, wherein is nothing specified of the year 1590—1591. He asks that the disposing of that stock for the public benefit of the town be considered. The bearer John Clarke has asked to have the employing of the stock: and will give security for the principal and employ it to the setting on work of many in the town about clothing and relieving of such of the poor as cannot work.

Ibid. No. 32. [Feb. 24, 1592.] R. Parkins to the Mayor, from Bunny. He regrets his continued illness "knowinge well I am not borne for myselfe butt for the common wealthe: my many journeys in heate and cold without profitt to my selfe maye manifest the same." He must take care for his children's sake, "the rather for that I ame informed the wardshipp of my eldest sonne is allreadie begged yf I dye." He asks to be excused from the assizes "for necessytie hathe no lawe." He longs to come "for dyvers secrettes not hurtfull to the towne. In the meane tyme I praye youe have a speciall care to keepe vnytie amongest your companys. And I praye youe intreate Mr Dethick<sup>2</sup> to geeve the chardges for me. Yt shall not neede him to be verrie curious therein butt goe playnelie therto as he shall best lyke for the ease of the Judges. I know the man can doe yt well and is carefull and honest to do all thinges as apperteyneth."

Ibid. No. 33. [March 22, 1592.] The EarI of Huntingdon to the Mayor and burgesses from York. He hears that Parkins, the Recorder (whose sufficiency for the place he commends), intends to resign. He recommends Mr Humphrey Purifie to succeed him, whose integrity, honesty of life and good knowledge they know to be sufficient for the place, if Parkins insists in his determination to leave, "whereof I doubt not you will have such consideration as shall well behoove you."

Ibid. No. 34. [March 16, 1592.] (Signature illegible) to the Mayor. The writer gives a message from the Earl to deal well with Archer for his faithful service in the suit<sup>3</sup>.

Ibid. No. 35. [March 24, 1592.] The Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor from York. He complains that his letter is unanswered and its order unperformed. He requires order to be taken to provide coals or else that an answer be sent.

Hall Papers II, No. 53<sup>2</sup>. [April, 1592.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) After oure humble duties remembred to your good Lordshippe, wheare it is suggested (as we perceyve by your lordshippes lettres) that our recorder (Mr Parkyns) determinent to leave his recordershipp, whiche is vnknown to vs, nor (we hoope) he hathe

Theise disorders hathe mutche allienated the mynde of our said recorder, whoe allwaies hath perswaded to vs vnytie and concorde, yet nowe perceyvinge (by your lordshippes good meanes) that we are lycklye to be reduced to our former peace, and that the faction of a private man' ys espied (by the whole) to be unprofitable to all. And that the same hathe growen of singularitie without cawse or reason, forgettinge God, her Maiesties goodnes and our benefactors, he is nowe better appeased to see our reconcilement to lyve in vnytye, and to amende that ys amysse, wherein (and for our better aide herevnto) we most humblie desire your lordshippe cowntenaunce towardes good men, and suppressinge the contrarye emongest vs. And further (towchinge our said recorder), the many good guiftes he ys indewed withall we cannot but commend, nor we can not (in reason) but imbrace and reteyne his good disposicion and greate paynes with vs this manye yeres, but with thankfull myndes to content hym. And althoughe we know hym of that temperance, to take all in good parte, without seekinge anythinge for his gayne, we are therefore the rather [willing] to have consideration of hym, accordinglye. These therefore considered, he ys not emongest vs (as we can perceyve...<sup>2</sup>) not effectually edesier his contynuance, and for that we knowe your lordshippe hathe knowne hym and affected him...by manye veres which surelye on his parte ys not forgotten, we are the rather for your lordship sake to do to him, and so we desire vt maie be, least he shoulde thincke vs to vse hym woorse (after his manye yeres travell for vs) then the carter his horse, who allthoughe he dye vnder his loode, yet is he well provendred in his lief. And where as in your lordshippes lettres the 22 of February we vnderstand that one John Clarke of our towne of Leicester hathe made peticion vnto your honour to have thimployinge of the stocke of coles, and hath informed you, that he will make vs sufficient securitye for the principall, and (to) imploye the same to the settinge on worke of manye in our towne aboute clothinge and relyevinge of suche poore amongest vs as cannot worke, we vpon the receipt thereof demaunded of him, what securitye he colde put in for the same, who answered, he wold not name his sewerties, before he did knowe when he shoulde

He therevppon hathe named two vnto vs to be his suerties, the one of them a straunger lyuinge in our towne called Pilkington, a man of greate age and lyveth onlye vpon a small annuytye, and the other vs father in lawe to the said Clarke, a man of small habillytye, and not men sufficient for our discharge therein. Notwithstandinge we are readye to accomplishe the content of your lordshippes said lettres, in suche sorte as we maye be sufficientlye discharged thereof and nowe at the makinge hereof, we promysed hym xlli. at Maye daye, so we maye knowe the sufficience of his suerty one sevenight before, which he hathe promysed. And thus hopinge in your good acceptacion of this our mynde touchinge our... and our other cawses as well for the preacher and Archer and otherwvse...<sup>1</sup>.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 36. [Ap. 22, 1592.] From Bunny. R. Parkins to Mr Dethick. He cannot write to the Mayor as to-morrow is our great day for choosing the coroner etc. He missed Lord Huntingdon, after two days on horse-back to await him, because he went by Newark and not by Nottingham, disappointing many. Hutchinson has been long suspected. Now you have taken him "with the mayner<sup>2</sup>," wherefore he is not bailable. He details that he has discovered from another examinate certain parts of Hutchinson's movements, concerning which enquire further. They belong to the "crewe of the falsest knaves in the contrey." He received the letter by Hutchinson's daughter. It may have been opened.

Ibid. No. 37. [Ap. 24, 1592.] From Brampton. James Norwich addresses the Mayor on behalf of his brother John Norwich committed to prison for misdemeanours shewed to Mistress Chippingdale<sup>3</sup>. He offers surety.

Ibid. No. 38. [June 2, 1592.] The Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor. From his house in Broadstreet. The bearer John Clarke has been long a suitor to have the disposing of the coal money to the benefit of the poor by setting them to work about clothing, for as much as he and another have given bond for the money till another be taken by the Recorder. On receipt of the money from Roe he orders £70 to be given to Clarke. Henry Bradgate's looms should be delivered to Clarke.

Ibid. No. 39. [June 20, 1592.] R. Parkins to the Mayor, from Bunny. Mr Thomas Cave sent his book 5 for perusal that was to pass between the town and him. There are provisoes he mislikes. "And for that the gent is a favorer of the # CCCXIX. Letter on points affecting the municipal constitution.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 41. [July 28, 1592.] From the Mayor to Mr Francis Gaudie, Justice of Assize and Gaol Delivery. Francis Byard a clerk convict, having been discharged from paying his fees, without any restraint of keeper or irons, to travel and be a keeper of other prisoners, one Brian Shiers prayed process against him. The writer granted a capias and he was attached, and put in custody of the bailiff of the liberty. The writ enclosed was delivered by John Brown the town gaoler requiring his release. "I refused upon counsell's advice (the Recorder was away) first because the writ is Maiori et Aldermannis and we are incorporate by the name of the Maior and Burgesses and so the allowance thereof prejudiciall to our corporation. Secondly for that the writt is Ideo vobis precipimus quod prefatus Thos. Biard, etc. and indeed there is no Thos. Byarde in the gaol. Thirdly for that the baily of the liberty of the town of Leicester who hath full and whole charge of the gaol and return of process is not named in the writ. Fourthly for that neither of your lordships hands are at the writts end. Lastly because the debt is unsatisfied and if he is released the baily is chargeable therewith, and I subject to an action "of the case" at the baily's suit."

Mr Bell adds: "Mr Mayor the exceptions you take to the suit of privilege are amendable in all except the prisoners being in execution, whereon my lord will not intermeddle, and therefore the cause being true, you may do as in justice appertaineth."

CCCXX. Contribution of town foot-soldiers.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 42. [July 29, 1592.] (The Sheriff to the Mayor.) Hall Papers II, No. 91. [July 29, 1592.] Mr George Tatam, and Mr George Noryce, two of the Aldermen of the towne of Leicester, and Mr Hynd one other, dyd, before Mr Chettell Maior, say that John Knight, tanner, said to Mr Hynde, there ys never a juste man of the benche, amongest you all. For which cawse, the said Knight was commytted to ward by the said Mr Mayor wheare he remayned vntyll he was further called.

Sondaye Julye 30, 1592: at after evenynge prayer: a metinge of Mr Maior and certen of the Aldermen, for the cawse aforesaid, viz.:

The said John Knight called before there worsheppes, and charged with the wordes aforesaid, with wordes he hathe confessed and saythe he spake them, but spake them vnadvisedly and rashlye, and ys verye sorrye for ytt.

Also he saith, that Harrye Mole, shoomaker, came to hym to the Hall yesterdaye: and vnderstandinge the cause of his punyshement, than badd him stycke to ytt, and sayd further yf Mr Maior wold not release hym, he and a meynye men wold fetche hym oute<sup>1</sup>.

Hall Papers II, No. 93. [Aug. 18, 1592.] The sayinge of Mr William Morton. He saythe, that Mr Stanford said to hym the second daye of August last, comynge from Hathorne, that the Maior and the rest had not taken neyther of those endes that were appoynted, but had taken a third end towchinge Archer, which should not stand, and that the Maior was not a fytt man for the place, nor the man he tooke hym for, for he thought he had byn another manner of man. And that the Recorder had delte lyke a knave, and he wold tell hym of ytt, lyke a lame knave as he is, and he dowbted his fynger was in the pye, abowte Archer. And also that he wold have some of them by the heeles, and also willed hym not to tell Mr Maior of the wordes he spake by him, etc.

Dethyck.

Present at the publisshinge of the said wordes. (Mayor and eight named.)

&lt;sup>1</sup> There is a letter from the Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor on these disturbances, Portfolio of Letters, No. 43. [Aug. 7, 1592.] He has received the Mayor's letter of July 25, with a note of the variance between the town and others. Archer shewed the Earl an agreement in the clerk's hand. The Earl has referred this and other matters to Mr Justice Beaumont and Mr Parkins, the Recorder. "I require your conformytie to be ordered by them."

Ibid. No. 94. [Sep. 5, 1592.] All these persons last aboue mencioned (see the list on p. 287) have voluntaryelye deposed vppon the Holye Evangelest, that they, nor any of them, have not practysed with Tusser nor Layton in offeringe hym or them xls. to make a suplycacion to the Queenes Maiestye ageynst the commissyoners<sup>1</sup>, and that yf they or other of them wold deale therein, the partye which offred the said xls. wold procure 500 handes to ytt; which offer Tusser told Mr Bowes was made to hym, by one of the best of the XXIIII<sup>ti</sup>.

Hit ys nowe agreed, by the said aboue last mencioned partyes, that he whatsoeuer he ys, that hath made the said offer, beinge of the said Companye, and beinge founde oute and iustlye proved ageynst hym, shall be dismissed of and from the said Companye and also disfraunchised.

CCCXXXVIII. Trade Ordinals.

Hall Papers II, No. 280. [Undated.] Letter to the Justices, referring to the Ordinals of trades and the statute requiring that they must not be against the common profit of the people and must be approved by the Chancellor, Treasurer or Chief Justices of either Bench, or before both the Justices of Assize. The country towns of Leicestershire are plenished full of craftsmen and men of trades which do weekly frequent our markets and there do retail their wares, whereby they do not only take the benefit of our market from the poor artizans and craftsmen of our town but afterwards pack up and make their return home to their dwellings without bearing any manner of charges towards the benefit of our town as other artisans (articentes) therein do. The inhabitants have therefore grown very poor. It is hoped that the Justices will take order for reform.

Ibid. No. 281. List of sums due on the ordinals of bakers, shoemakers, weavers, tailors, glovers, shearmen: total £7. 12s. 10d.

Ibid. No. 287. [No date.] Brewer's Ordinal allowed. Mr Will. Norice appointed master, and Tho. Clark and Mr Ellice wardens. It is agreed upon by full voice and consent and none spake against it. Mr Mayor and the Justices to appoint two honest men to be ale tasters in every ward. The Hall divided on the assize of ale, 25 for new ale at 4d. a gallon, 23 for 3d.

CCCXXXIX. Difficulty in the collection of Fee-farm rents.

Box 2 A, No. 780. [June 20, 1594.] <sup>1</sup>Exemplification and inspeximus of a certain decree in the treasury (camera) of the Duchy of Lancaster at Westminster, dated June 15, 1594, for the Mayor and burgesses of Leicester. Whereas the Queen by letters patent in Feb. 31 Eliz. granted part of the lands and tenements in Leicester being parcel of the Duchy in fee farm for the yearly rent of £137. 13s.  $o_4^3d$ , with a nomine pene of £10 if the rent be behind for 40 days, for 80 days £20, for 6 months another £20, and so till the rent be paid: the lands were let to several persons, with the clause in the leases that if the rent be behind for 40 days and not paid to the General Receiver, the lease should be void. By reason of which several provisoes, the tenants refuse to pay their rents to the Mayor and burgesses. Whereupon in the term of Easter last, at the motion of

Mr Philip Gerard on behalf of the Mayor and burgesses, it was ordered that the tenants should pay their rents to the Mayor and burgesses and if not paid in the second return of this present term shew good cause to the contrary and further as the record sets forth. Since that time, in spite of notice received, the tenants shew no cause why they should not pay. As the Mayor and burgesses are bound to pay the fee farm to H.M. and under these heavy penalties, and as the Duchy Court is persuaded that the lessees ought to pay their rents to the Mayor and burgesses, and as H.M.'s receiver prefers to be paid in one sum by the Mayor and burgesses rather than by the payments of the undertenants, it is ordered by the Chancellor and Council of the Court that the lessees must pay to the Mayor and burgesses at the times fixed in their leases, and that then the Mayor and burgesses shall not take advantage of the provisoes for non-payment. If the lessees still refuse, the Mayor and burgesses may take their remedy. (Duchy seal, imperfect.)

CCCXL. Minutes of a Common Hall.

Hall Book III, p. 64. [Aug. 30, 1594.] <sup>2</sup> A petition to the Earl of Huntingdon from the Tradesmen of Mount Sorell etc. considered upon. Firste a petition oppenlie readd, which by the tradesmen of Mount Sorell and other places in the countrie was lately exhibited to the Earle of Huntingdon, and by his honor delyvered to our said Recorder, to be nowe openly readd and considered upon, togeither with an answere thereof.

An Answer thereto made by the Recorder. Also theire was then oppenlie readde, an answeere thereof made by our said Recorder<sup>3</sup> for the said Earle, conteigninge 37 articles, to greate effecte, and learnedly sett oute etc. whie they sholde not trafique in Leicester, excepte they wold dwell and inhabite theire, etc.

Orders made by the Judges for restraint of Artizans and Tradesmen. #### CCCXLVI. Letters on town business.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 50. [Oct. 4, 1595.] Letter from the Privy Council, printed from the register in Dasent's Acts of the Privy Council, 1595—6, p. 7.

Ibid. No. 51. (Whereas the lords of the Privy Council wrote to the Earl bidding him restrain the graziers from using pease to feed their cattle and enjoined them to send them to market where the poor may buy them for food, the matter has been by him referred to the Justices who make it known. Only such sheep and swine as each man kills in his own house may eat pease.)

Ibid. No. 52. [Oct. 22, 1595.] The Earl of Huntingdon to Sir George Hastings<sup>2</sup> and Tho. Cave. Note, 22 Ap. 1596, this letter was delivered by Mr Yates Mayor to put on this file.

(Has received the letter of the Mayor and his Brethren) whereby they do informe me that when the campe was at Tilberie theie made forth fortie souldiers for that towne and delivered unto Sir Georg Villeurs, then the Captaine appointed, the some of £20, which their share he never imploied to anie use for them but still detaineth the same in his hands. Theie have intreated my lettres unto you either to be means unto Sir Geo. Villeurs to repaie the said £20 which as yet remeyneth in his custodie unaunswered unto them or els to ease them so much otherwise in the charges of the fortie men which have now to be trained.

Ibid. No. 53. London, Nov. 19, 1595. Thomas Newerke<sup>1</sup> to the Mayor and Burgesses. Mr Rowe has asked him for the arrears of the fee farm. As it has grown "by diverse years past," he will take it at two payments, £26. 13s. 4d. at once, the rest in a year.

A. Tatam is in arrear for his last payment of the 37th year, which was refused without the town's arrears, because it grew out of that; £8. 10s. must also be sent.

1bid. No. 54. [Nov. 21, 1595.] From J. Evelyn and Rob. Evelyn<sup>2</sup> to the Mayor and Brethren. Hearing of the continuance of the variance between Rob. Fosbrooke and Ralph and Will. Lowe saltpetremen touching their pretended interests as well of and in the deputation for the county and also for and about the workhouse late Foxe's in the town of Leicester, it should ere now have been ended by the arbitration of impartial viewers pricing the buildings. The Lowes ought to have paid Fosbrooke, and delay is to the hindrance of H. M.'s service. We have authorized Fosbrooke to work in Foxe's house for H. M.'s service.

Note of receipt of the letter Dec. 11, 1595.

CCCXLVII. The Brewers' Ordinal.

William Morton, Maior.

CCCLIII. Letter from Richard Archer.

Hall Papers II, No. 381. [March 22, 1597.] To the worshipfull Mr Maior of the towne of Leicester and his bretheren and the XLVIII my loving frendes and fellowes.

Humbly sheweth to your worship and the rest that as well in performance of my dutye towardes this towne whereof I am a poore member and have beene aboue xxx yeres, as in dischardg and ease of my troubled conscience which moveth me thereto, I am very sorry that my occasions are so great that I cannot attend this place at this tyme myself but to make that knowne to you by writing which I wilbe ready at any time hereafter to avow. So it is that there will presently ensue a losse of xxx/i. yerelie to this towne if spedy redresse be not by your good wisdomes had and prouided for the same. Also &lt;sup>1</sup> In Hall Papers II, No. 274, is the Mayor's letter to the Earl of Huntingdon, March 3, 1597, on Will. Hollinshed's committal pending sureties for his action. As the town has now agreed with him, shall he be released?

I know and I suppose it is knowne to this whole assembly (with griefe may I speake it) that this towne is greatly indetted and that there remayneth a somme of money due to this towne in some mens handes as will dischard the same (if it with your good likinges may stand) to call them to an account. If these may be done all controversies concerning the towne may be ended, Her Maiesties most gracious and princely guift, the honorable commenders thereof and the pore and the whole towne not abused, I rest satisfied and haue no further cause of complaint; which if they be not regarded but neglected I shall have cause and will complayne where remedye may be had, though I am altogether vnwilling so to doe. This I wilbe ready to declare and let you vnderstand when you or any such as shalbe appointed for the same shall appoint me to attend them at their convenient leysure. And so with hartie prayers to God for you all and all your councells and meetinges that they tend to the glory of Gods benefitt of this towne and reliefe of the poore I most humbly crave pardon.

Richard Archer.

Hall Papers II, No. 430. [Oct. 5, 1597.] Letter from the Mayor to the Earl, promising to attend to his letter.

lbid. No. 431. [Oct. 7, 1597.] From the Mayor, Recorder and others to the same, explaining the circumstances under which the election of the two burgesses was made, and that due formalities were observed, and the Earl's desire for the choice of T. Beaumont made known and urged by the Recorder. The Company refused to elect him because he was an "incloser" himself and unlikely to redress that wrong in others. Though the Earl received a letter agreeing to his nomination it cannot have been written by the town clerk who alone is authorized to write the letters of the Mayor and brethren. It was Mr Morton who proposed G. Parkins's election. (In full in Thompson's Leicester, pp. 300—1.)

CCCLX. Minutes of Common Halls.

Hall Book III, p. 142<sup>2</sup>. [Oct. 21, 1597.] Whereas Aug. 9, 1597 Mr Geo. Tatam and Mr Thos. ## CCCLXI. The Stewardship.

Box 2 A, No. 886. [Nov. 28, 1597.] Latin letters patent of Elizabeth. Whereas by letters patent under the duchy seal of June 21, 1591 we have granted to Sir Edward Hastings the office of Steward of our town of Leicester otherwise called the town clarke, to hold during pleasure, and to enjoy the fees and emoluments of that office from the issues and profits of the honor of Leicester, as did lately the lord of Loughborough<sup>1</sup>, or Henry Earl of Huntingdon or any other; and whereas Sir Edward restored the letters to the court to be cancelled, with the intention that others should be drafted for the convenience of the Mayor and burgesses, we have granted to the Mayor of Leicester for the time being the office of Steward, called the office of towne clarke, to have it on the same terms as the above, provided he will keep a second copy of the court-rolls of the town of Leicester and deposit it in the Duchy Court at Westminster, and provided that these letters will not be valid if not enrolled before the Auditor within a year. Record of enrolment before the Auditor Oct. 9, 1598. (Duchy seal.)

CCCLXII. Poachers and the Liberty's franchise.

Portfolio of Letters, No. 58. [Dec. 23, 1597.] Francis Beaumont to the Mayor. He hears that some of the town in very disorderly manner offend against Sir John Gray's 2 conies and have stolen some ferrets. He was told to apply to the Mayor to send them to Gracedieu that he might examine them, and he hears the mayor has refused. He marvels, and names a day for them to come. "Although you have authorytie by your charter to punyshe dyverse sorts of offences commytted within your liberties, yett this being an offence committed out of your liberties you are not to deale with all, but the examinacion and punishmente therof belongeth unto anie of the Justices of peace of this county....Do not in protectinge of anie suche malefactors abuse your liberties and soe bringe theim in hazard." If they doubt him, they may ask their Recorder.

Ibid. No. 59. [Dec. 28, 1597.] Thomas Nixe, Mayor, to Mr Justice Beaumont Judge of Common Pleas.

Has received Beaumont's letter on certain coney stealers. Has bound them over when within the liberty, although the deed was done out of the liberty. Asks for a warrant to apprehend these "hunters" or these lewd fellows will become froward and bring their action for the conveying them out of the liberty where he has no authority.

CCCLXIII. Minutes of Common Halls.

Hall Book III, p. 145. [March 13, 1598.] (Commissioners appointed from the 24 and 48 to survey town lands, and let and sell them.)

CCCLXX. Letters on Town Business.

Hall Papers II, No. 545. [Oct. 12, 1598.] Good Mr Maior, noe lesse commendacions then hartie thankes in generall for your k[ind letter1] wherin I have moved Mr Attorney of the duchie2 for the stainge of Woorshipps [action1] as youe desired. But all in vayne for (honestas parvipenditur) all promisess [are] not kepte. For he faythfullie promissed your Chamberlaine, with my selfe, that we shoulde bee preceaded therin, before this terme, and then with notice of our partes. I chardged him with his promisse, whoe protestethe vnto me, it passed by the offecall of Mr Chauncellors owne selfe, before wee ever spooke, and that not knowne to him selfe, till of late, when it was too late to helpe. But I rather thinke that Angells Gabriell<sup>3</sup> have bine shutors againste youe. For (Auri sacra fames quid non mortalia pectora cogis4) and beinge as it is to make a virtue of necessitie, beinge, that wee maye vse him otherwise, I woulde not faule out with him, but have reserved him to make youe amense (as he hathe promissed) in that lease yf ther bee any helpe, or in any other occasion. Next for publication of your depositions, youe are wonderfullie mistaken, for I find by searche in the duchie office towe orders, one where publication hathe passed att the request of youe the plentiffes; yf therfor youe have copies of them I praye youe sende me woorde, and howe youe are overtaken by your memories in writinge the publication was not graunted. The other order it semethe was for a newe commission, which remaynethe ther as a blancke, without nomination of any commissions, seminge as that the same shoulde have bine staied vppon some agreement betwixt the parties. And further as touchinge our other affayres, soe farre as wee have proceaded, the5 prosper well, which for a spedie and good endinge shall nether wante care nor diligence nor vse of frindes soe farre a[s] possiblie I maye doe youe love or good. And where youe speciallie writte for a couuntie of itselfe, I moved Mr Attorney Generall6 formerlie, whoe refferred me over to my Lord Andersonne, whose answer was, that by howe many corporations in Englande weare counties, by soe many ther weare over many, which was to conclude he liked of none; nevertheless wee will deale wiselie as wee maye

For great personns canne not endure importunities, therefore in tediose shutes wee must winne them as wee maye, by litle and litle. And soe in the ende perfect our purpose, which wee ame after. Thus beinge hastned vnto other occasions, I ame enforsed obbruptlie to ende. Committinge youe all vnto the direction of the Allmightie whoe ever sende youe all that shall bee good for youe all. Temple interior, this present xiith of October anno 1598 Regine quadragessimo.

Yours faithfullie lovinge and moste assured in all, Geo. Parkyns.

I praye my beste remembraunce done vnto good Mr Robert Heyricke with hartie thankes for his kinde lettree, which I receaved from his brother.

Hall Papers II, No. 541. [Oct. 17, 1598.] George Belgrave to the Mayor on behalf of the bearer, who informs him that he is inhibited from dwelling in a house within your Corporation unless he find bonds for £200 that neither his wife nor children shall be burdensome to the town "at which condition I muche mervayle seing ther is no suche matter in any of the late statutes made ther for the provision of ye pooer or for ye punissment of rogues." He testifies to the man's character. He has been no charge to our town, "and for your Corporation or any other toune whatsoever, to provide in futuer what shall befall in that respect, wear very inconvenient, because you and others do now know your present estates, little knowing what may become of posterities. Therefore for as mutch as it is lawfull for every subject that hath a house to sell [or] to lett the same to him that needeth... and for him that needeth it is lawfull to take of him that hath to sell, I am to intreat you to be respective of this bearer." ## CCCLXXI. Examinations before the Justices.

Hall Papers II, No. 547. Oct. 18, 1598. For accuzacion<sup>2</sup>. The sayinges of Johanne Cradocke the wyfe of Robertt Cradocke of Leicester, cutler.

The saide Johanne Cradocke saith that on Wensdaye before twelveth daye was a twelmoneth, Mistress Clarke the wyfe of Mr Thomas Clarke nowe Maior of Leicester came to the saide Johanne Cradockes howsse to demaunde rent for the said howsse, and the said Johanne answered she knewe not to whom she shoulde paie the rent, whether to the Queenes Maiestie, or vnto youre Mistress

Clarke, then the said Mistress Clarke said vnto her these wordes (viz.): the Queene hathe no neede of my rent, but said the Queene shoulde have a rope, and theis wordes she repeated twice, beinge both togeyther in Johanne Cradockes yarde and beinge demaunded whoe was present att the same tyme, saith not anye bodye, but herselfe and the said Mistress Clarke.

And further the said Johanne Cradocke saythe, that she toulde her neighbors aboute her, the sayings of the said Mistress Clarke, but did not complayne herselfe neither to the Maior of the towne of Leicester nor to any of the Justicis of the same towne, but was advysed by her said neybours to houlde her tounge for shame, for that they knewe Mistress Clarke woulde give oute noe suche wordes.

The daie and yeere aforesaid and before thaforesaid Justicis the examynacion or sayinges of Anne Clarke the wief of Mr Thomas Clarke nowe Maior of the towne of Leicester, geavon and saide by the said Johanne Cradocke to thaforesaid Maior and Justicis.

The said examynate beinge demaunded whether she spoake vnto Johanne Cradocke the wiefe of Robert Craddocke of Leicester, cutler, those wordes viz.: that the Queenes Maiestie shoulde have a rope, answereth and saith that vppon her salvacion she never spooke any suche wordes at any tyme neyther to her, nor any others. And God defende, saythe she, I shoulde ever speake evell wordes against Her Maiestie.

Hall Papers II, No. 564. [Jan. 16, 1599.] Richard Hickes examinate says that on Dec. 3 last, "he lying on his bed, with three more prisoners, and their keeper, Will. Saunderson the gaoler, in the same roome, in rehersing of wordes, the said Saunderson did perswade this examinate that he should write unto Sir Edw. Hastings knight concerning of treason towchinge Mistris Meyrys and Mr Morton—Sir Edw. and Mr Morton not being friends."

CCCLXXII. Letters on the Renewal of the Charter.

Hall Papers II, No. 548. [Oct. 17, 1598.] After my very hartie commendacions. Wheras a petition has ben dyrected by the Master of the Requestes vnto her Maiesties Atturney Generall, my master, for the renewing of the charter of the towne of Leicester, with some addicions and amendements of the defectes of the said former charter: For that my master will not proceade to the perfecting of the said new charter before he doeth vnderstand your concentes and good liking thervnto: And that he doe allso vnderstand from you as well the names of the Maior, Aldermen and other officiers that are to be appointed by this new book, as also the auncient government and order of the said towne, and by what officers, and in what manner they have ben and is presently governed,—I have therfore (having the charge of the drawing of the said booke committed vnto me) thought good to signifie his worshippes pleasure vnto you. Praying you by writing engrossed in parchment and sealed with your common seale to certifie your consentes for the renewing of the charter, and allso to sett downe as well the names of such persons as shall be appointed to be officers in your new charter, as the forme of your government and the eleccion of your officers, as yt is and hath ben aunciently vsed, to the end ther vppon your certificate therof the booke mai proceede accordingly: I praie you allso send vp some of your best and latest chartres, or a trewe copie therof, for they will geve greate furthrans to this busynes. And so doe very hartily comitt you to the blessed proteccion of ve Allmightie. At the Temple this xviith of October, 1598.

Yours assuredly to vse

Ry. Locksmith.

CCCLXXIII. Brewers' Ordinal.

Hall Papers II, No. 557 b. [Nov. 24, 1598.] The ordynall for the brewars was nowe openlye readd, and the same vnto the common Hawle seemd good to bee put in execution, so as it shalbee lawfull for the inholders to brewe for their travelinge gesstes and famyleys only, but not to suffer any townes men to typle in there howses, except it bee with a stranger; hit ys nowe further agreed that the said ordynall shalbee putt in execucion, accordynge to the contentes thereof, and that all fynes and forfeytures thereby arysinge, vntill this daye twelve monethe, shalbee to make a stocke for the vse of the poore.

And also yt ys agreed that Mr Mayor shall nowe name and appoynt a master and two wardens to put the said ordynall in execucion, who so beinge named shall forfytt vli. apece yf they refewze to execute the same, or do not execute the same, and to be payd within one monethe next after the forfeyture thereof.

Item yt ys agreed that the companyes at every Common Hawle syses and sessyons and fayors shall weare gownes on peyne of the 24 xiid. apeece and the 48 vid. apeece.

CCCLXXV. Letter to the Earl of Huntingdon on the town's poverty.

Hall Papers II, No. 572. [March, 1599.] The Mayor explains why the corporation have not waited on the Earl, and laments the decay of the town. The raising of soldiers and subsidies and poor relief reduce the town and make men "refuse our societies." There is no clothmaking or trade. The town has existed 2000 years and never so poor as now. # CCCLXXVI. Freedom from Toll.

Hall Papers II, No. 574. [March 20, 1599.] After our duties remembred to your honor, maye itt please youe, the towne of Leicester, [part]¹ of the duchie of Lancaster, hathe remayned (by manye ages) a free towne, for [merchants]¹ and others that woulde resorte for traffique to buye or sell there. And the Earles of Leicester and Lancaster, consideringe the situacion thereof (beinge in the mydest of the countye of Leicester), as well in regarde of the ease of the countrye, as also for the proffytt of the said towne, have devised (from tyme to tyme) meanes to contynue and increase the said towne, and have thought no meanes more apte thereunto, then by pollicie to govern well and by good order and curteouse entreatie, to alewer² and bringe the confynynge³ neighbours to resorte, traffique and merchaundice there. And for better accomplishment wheareof they procured a libertie, to all that would so come and traffique, to bee free from tole for any thinge to bee bought or sold there, by which meanes the said towne hathe beene contynued in reasonable good estate, vntill nowe of late (by some vndewe meanes) hathe bene suggested to youre honour to the contrarye, and as we vnderstand a lease therebie is allredie graunted oute of the duchie to one Mannynge to take tolle for all thinges bought and sold within the said towne, a thing vnherde of heretofore, [which] tolle takinge dothe greatelye discontent the countrie people, and is and wilbee great hurte to the saide towne of Leicester. Sure affirmacion that the said towne shoulde be free from tole, wee thincke wilbe well proved by matter of recorde, and wee, the gentlemen inhabitantes in the said countie of Leicester, for the love we beare vnto oure countrie, and maynetenaunce of the said towne, have thought itt oure partes and dewtie to signifie the premisses to your honor, humblie desiringe youre honor that it wolde please youe to have consideracion hereof, wherein the whole cuntrie and towne of Leicester shalbe muche bownden and beholdinge to youre honor. Anderson stating that the Mayor gave leave to have the Maypole set up, which was done with morrice dancers, but the Mayor was "privily incensed." The writer hopes to see more morrice-dancing than ever before, for he heard Mr Hunter say that when he came to be Mayor he would allow a morrice out of service-time. For such speeches the Mayor has bound him over to appear at the assizes. He prays for favour. In full in Thompson's Leicester, p. 305; Kelly's Notices, pp. 230—2.

CCCLXXX. Charter of Elizabeth2.

Roll 899*. [June 1, 1599.] Elizabeth (etc.) to all those to whom these our present letters come, greeting. Whereas our borough of Leicester is a borough very ancient and populous, and from ancient times has been a borough incorporate, and the inhabitants thereof and their predecessors have hitherto had and held divers liberties, franchises, etc. as well on account of prescriptions and customs used in the said borough from time immemorial as from gifts and grants made by divers of our progenitors once kings of England-which grants were not made to the inhabitants by the one uniform name of a corporation, but under various and different names, as fully appears from various charters and letters patent of our several progenitors then of old time made and granted: And whereas our beloved subjects the Mayor and burgesses of our borough of Leicester have most humbly besought us—inasmuch as we are willing in this behalf graciously to extend to the said Mayor and burgesses our royal favour and munificence: And because we, for the better government and improvement of the borough have vouchsafed by our letters patent to ratify, etc. or create anew the said Mayor and burgesses of the borough into another body corporate and politic, by the name of Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses of the borough of Leicester, with the addition of certain liberties as shall seem to be expedient for the public good: We therefore being graciously concerned for the improvement of the borough, and willing that for the future some certain and undoubted rule may be observed for maintaining the peace and good government of the people therein, and desiring that the borough may for ever remain peaceful and quiet, to the terror of evil-doers and the praise of them that do well, and that our peace and other acts of justice may be observed there without further hindrance, and expecting that if the burgesses of the same borough and their successors can boast of greater honours, liberties and privileges from our ampler grant, that then they will feel themselves more especially and more strongly bound to execute all services and duties which shall be incumbent upon them to us our heirs and successors: Of our special grace we order that the borough of Leicester shall be a free borough in itself, and that the burgesses and their successors for ever are and shall be by virtue of these presents one body corporate and politic in fact and in name, and a perpetual community of one Mayor, two bailiffs and the burgesses of the borough of Leicester, and by the same name they shall have a constant succession.

And that they under the name of Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall be for ever persons able and competent in law to hold, receive, and possess lands, tenements, liberties and privileges of whatever kind, in fee and perpetuity, and also goods and chattels, with power to grant and assign lands, etc. by the aforesaid name, and to plead and be impleaded in all courts and in all suits.

And that they have a common seal, which seal at their pleasure they may destroy, change or alter.

And one of the burgesses shall be called Mayor and two shall be chosen and called bailiffs, and there shall be twenty-four men, inhabiting in the borough who shall be called Aldermen, and the Mayor shall be deemed to be one of the Aldermen; and there shall be forty-eight others, inhabiting in the borough, called The Company of eight and fortie, and these forty-eight shall be called the Common Council of the borough, and shall help the Mayor and Aldermen in all matters touching the borough.

The Mayor and Aldermen and their successors or the more part of them shall have full power to grant and make from time to time such laws and regulations as shall seem to them useful and salutary, for the good government of the inhabitants and artificers of the borough, both for the victualling of the borough and for the disposal of lands given to the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses.

And that the said Mayor and Aldermen and their successors or the more part of them may inflict penalties and imprison offenders against such laws, provided the laws be not contrary to the laws of the realm.

And for the better executing these our grants we assign and nominate our beloved Thomas Clark Mayor of the said borough to be the first and present Mayor of the borough, and the said Thomas Clark shall continue in the office of Mayor from the granting of these presents till the feast of St Matthew next following and upon the said feast some other Aldermen shall be chosen to his office.

We also nominate and make Thomas Chettle, now Alderman, and James Andrew, one of the forty-eight, to be the two first and present bailiffs to remain in office till the feast of St Matthew.

We have appointed Thomas Clarke, now Mayor, and our well-beloved Will. Norrice, James Clarke, John Stanford, Geo. Tatam, Rob. Heirick, Will. Morton, James Ellis, Will. Ludlam, Ralph Chettel, Will. Yates, Tho. Nixe, Edw. Newcome, Rob. Gillot, Will. Rowes, Hugh Hunter, John Mabbs, Francis Watts, the said Tho. Chettel (one of the bailiffs), Tho. Manby, Liben Chamberleyn, Will. Warde, Tho. Chapman, John Freake, now Aldermen, to be the first twenty-four Aldermen for life during good conduct.

We have appointed our well-beloved Geo. Brooke, Tho. Heirick, Ric. Archer, Will. Biggs, Valentine Wells, Ric. Barstall, Tho. Hunt, Rob. Woolley, John Bennett, John Woodford, Rob. Atton, Mic. Thornton, Ric. Stanford, James Andrew (one of the bailiffs), Arth. Tatam, Hen. Halpeny, Will. Stanley, Joh. Spencer, Reg. Fausit, Hugh Marshal, John Brighte, Ant. Webster, Tho. Pate, John Lawnder, Christopher Nedam, Tho. Taylor, Christopher Hallifield, John Eyrick, Barth. Middleton, Hen. Pennington, Will. Okes, Wiat Fowler, Will. Vickers, Tho. Paynter, John Pare, Rob. Crosby, Geo. Greene, Edm. Abney, Ralph Orton, Tho. Stanford, Rob. Johnson, John Buggs, Nic. Gillott, Will. Jee, Ric. Normande, Thos. Yonge, Ralph Chettell, John Hynde, to be the Forty-eight for life during good conduct.

We will that the Mayor and Aldermen and Forty-eight and their successors, or the more part of them, shall have power to elect on St Matthew's day, in the Guildhall or other convenient place to be assigned, one of the Aldermen to be Mayor in the following year, who shall take an oath on the Gospels before the last Mayor, or in his absence before the Aldermen and burgesses assembled, to execute his office duly. Likewise they shall have power to elect two burgesses as bailiffs, to be sworn in the presence of the Aldermen and Forty-eight.

If the Mayor should die during office or be removed from office, the Aldermen and Forty-eight may elect another within fourteen days, to hold office for the rest of the year.

If a bailiff should die or be removed from office, at the pleasure of the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them, another may be elected to office for the rest of the year.

If any of the Aldermen die or are removed from office at the pleasure of the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them, the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them may elect a burgess to fill his place.

If any of the Forty-eight die or are removed from office at the pleasure of the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them, the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them may elect a burgess to fill his place.

We will that the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall have a man learned in the laws of England to be called Recorder, and we have appointed Ric. Parkyns Esq. to be the first and present recorder for life, and he shall swear before the Mayor to execute his office faithfully, and on his death the Mayor and Aldermen may elect his successor.

And we will that the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall have one learned in the laws of England to be called Steward, and we have appointed Thomas Ward gent. to be the first, and he may appoint a deputy and he or his deputy shall be sworn. On his death or removal the Mayor and Aldermen may elect his successor.

The Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall have also a common clerk and protonotary, and we have appointed Will. Derrick<sup>1</sup> gent. as the first for life, and he shall be sworn, and the Mayor and Aldermen or the more part of them may appoint his successor.

And there shall be five serjeants at mace to make proclamations and arrests and to execute processes, and keep the boundaries, to be elected by the Mayor and Aldermen. They shall attend the Mayor and bailiffs and be sworn in before the Mayor and Aldermen. They shall carry silver-gilt maces ornamented with the arms of the realm of England.

And we will that the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall hold in the Guildhall a court of record on Monday in very week or oftener at their will, before the Mayor, Recorder, Bailiffs, and Steward, or one of them, and hold all pleas of trespass, actions on the case, or of debt, account, covenant, fraud, detinue, and contract, arising within the borough, as fully as of yore, and that any person can implead anyone having rents or lands within the borough concerning the same, by procuring a writ of right patent from the Chancery, having promised to sue his plea on that writ, in manner of a writ of assize, of novel disseisin, of mort d'ancestor, or other action or writ at common law, and that such pleas, both real, personal and mixed, shall be heard before the Mayor, Recorder, Bailiffs, and Steward, or one of them in the Guildhall or elsewhere, according to the law and custom of the realm, as fully as in any other court of record. The serjeants at mace shall do what is needful touching the juries, panels, inquests, attachments, etc. as in other courts of record.

The Mayor, Recorder and four Aldermen who last were Mayors shall be Justices of the Peace to execute the statutes of vagabonds, artificers and labourers, and keep and correct the weights and measures, and any three of them (of whom the Mayor and Recorder shall be two) may hear all matters which belong to the office. But the Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen may not proceed without special mandate to determine any murder or felony or other cause touching life and limb.

The Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses shall have the View of Frankpledge twice a year in the month of Easter and of Michaelmas, before the Mayor or Recorder or Steward.

We will that no merchant or any man who is not a freeman of the borough may use any trade or buy or sell other than in gross, except only in fair time, unless he has obtained the licence of the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses.

We will that all the houses etc. within the parish of St Margaret called in English The Bishop's Fee, and within the parishes of St Mary, St Leonard and the Newark, with their occupants shall be under the rule of the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses of the borough, with the same powers as are enjoyed within the borough, without prejudice to the rights of our heirs and successors and saving the rights granted heretofore to others.

Whereas we learn that much harm arises within the borough to the terror of the burgesses, by reason that certain persons, forgetful of the common weal and state of the borough, and greedy of their own profit, have built ovens for grain called Mault killnes to dry barley and other grain, causing risk of fire, we order that no malt kiln be built or used unless it be 30 yards distant from any building, under a penalty of 6s. 8d.

For the relief of the poor and of sick men and women dwelling in Leicester, we grant that the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses may have a woolmarket for the purchase and sale of wool, woollen thread, and yarn, provided such market damage no neighbouring market, and any subject may buy wool, woollen thread and yarn brought into Leicester on the days appointed, when fairs and markets are held, and may sell the same again or use it in any way, the statute of 5 Ed. VI.1 or any other statute notwithstanding. Further we will that all tolls, stallages, pickages, fines, amercements, profits, etc. arising out of the said market shall be used for the profit of the poor and sick men and women within the borough.

We have confirmed to the Mayor, bailiffs and burgesses and their successors all the lands, etc. liberties, etc. and jurisdictions which they or the Mayor and burgesses or the burgesses under whatever name or by pretext of whatever incorporation, have or ought to have held hitherto, by grant of any of our ancestors, for the same rents and payments as were paid heretofore. Without fine into the hanaper.

therefore it maie please the right honorable the lord Keper<sup>1</sup>, to renewe the commission for the taxacion of the second subsidie within the said towne of Leicester, by the name of the borroughe of Leicester, the parishe of St Margarett, the Bishopps fee, the parishe of St Marie, the parishe of St Leonarde and the Newarke in the said burroughe of Leycester, as well within liberties as withoute.

And for that Fraunces Browne, one of the commissioners for the towne of Leicester, mencioned in the commission for the taxacion of the second subsidie, ys deade, that therefore it wolde please his honor, to appoynt some other in his steede for the better service of her Maiestie in that behalf, which if it please his honor maye bee theise—viz. The Maior of the towne of Leicester; Thomas Cave; Richard Parkyns, Recorder of the burroughe aforesaid; Henrye Cave, George Bellgrave, James Clarke, Robert Heyrycke and William Morton; or others, at his honors pleasure.

Also that it wold stand with his honors good favour, to except the said burghe and liberties oute of the commission for the countie of Leicester.

Also that it may please his honor to cause to bee deliuered and sent vnto the said newe commissioners ii or iii of these subsidie bookes, for there better proceadinge and instructions in that behalf.

And further if it shall stand with his honors good likinge, to graunte and directe his honors lettre or superseadias to Mr Thomas Cave and the commissioners for the countye of Leicester, not to entermeadle within the aforesaid liberties, for the assessinge of the subsidye etc.<sup>2</sup> But that the inhabitantes therein may from henceforthe be taxed with the inhabitantes of the burghe of Leicester, as parcell of the said burghe accordinge to the said newe graunte.

Endorsed: "Towchinge the Renuynge of the Commyssyon for the subsidyes to joyne thereunto the newe libertyes."

Hall Papers II, No. 688. [Nov. 23, 1599.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) Right honorable, my humble dutie remembred, may yt please your good lordshippe to be certified that vpon Sonday laste we did vpon suspicion apprehend within oure Corporacion an aged man, a traveyler on horsebacke, apparrelled with a gray frize jerkin, a white canvas dublett, a paire of yellowe leather breeches and a coloured paire of nether stockes with white garters, havinge with him also a cloake bagg, wherein he had shifte of lynnen, one other white canvas dublett cutt, and a coulored paire of nether stockes, divers popish bookes and pictures, a waxe candle, a wafer boxe, and a holly-water bottle, bothe in a case, and vpon him were founde a paire of beades and another popishe booke, and in money and gold almoste viili., whereof one peece of gold was of the popes owne coyne, and at his ostes house were founde of his a blacke sattin dublett, and a paire of blacke breeches drawen oute with taffatay; Whom we did then example and therevoon committ to prison, purposing presently to certifie your lordshippe thereof, but hopinge vpon his reexaminacion to have bene able more fully to certifie your honor, we stayed for that; the copies of which examinacions wee sende your lordshippe herewith, keepinge the man in prison as a dangerous wanderinge popishe recusant, humbly desiringe your lordshippes honoured advise and direction herein, togeither with your lordshippes warrant for the serchinge of suche places without our libertie as your lordshippe shall thinke fitt. And further may yt please your good lordship to be advertized that with privey watche vpon Wednesdaye night laste, I founde one Thomas Matchett of Castle Donnington and one Elizabeth Strelley, dawghter (as she say) of Mr John Strelley of Wynley¹ in Darbieshire, bothe togeither in one bede as man and wyfe, whom I stayed and have examined; the copies whereof I send your lorshippe herewith², keepinge Matchett safe in gayle and the gentlewoman in a house of good credit, forbearinge to hold suche course herein³, as in suche like lesse abhominable and inordinate conversacion we vsually do take, vntill we further knowe your lordshippes pleasure, for that as Matchet saiethe he dothe belonge to your honor. And thus with remembrance of my dutie humbly desiringe your lordshippes answere hereof, I humbly take my leave. From Leicester this xxiiith of November 1599.

Your honors humble to command Edw. Newcome, Maior.

Hall Papers II, No. 680. [Nov. 23, 1599.4] Mr Maior, I am given to understand that you have taken one Thomas Machett for certaine misdemeanors, committed by him within your towne of Leicester, which yf it be so, I praye you see him safely sent to me, to thende I may take some rounde course with him, aswell for his punishment that way, as allso for some other causes of weighte, in which I have further to deale with him; moreover I am informed that theire is a seminarye<sup>5</sup> taken amongste you; yf that be so likewise, I doe not a little marvaile that my selfe beinge the knowen Leiuetenant, should not have had both knowledge from you of his apprehendinge and the examinacion of him, before any pettye Justice within your towne or any other Justice, consideringe that in such cases, I houlde my aucthoritye somwhat more then any common Justice amongste you: as is well knowen to you all. Thus wishinge you to send Matchett to me so soone as you can, and for the other matter, thoughe you have not made me acquainted therewith, yet looke to it in such sorte, as that her Maiestie may not bee onely well served in it, but allso you may answeare the cause why you have concealed it from me. And so I committe you to God. Asheby, this xxiiith of November.

Hall Papers II, No. 685. [Nov. 24, 1599.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) Right honorable, my humble dewtie remembred. Maye itt please your good lordshippe, that this presente Sayturdaye I have received your honors lettre of the xxiiith of this instant November for the sendinge of Thomas Matchett to your lordshippe. Soe itt is, good my lord, that for his mysdemeyner within our towne, hee was committed to our gaole, as in my late lettre to your lordshippe doth appeyre. Sythence which tyme, there is one John Leytherland hath arrested him vppon an action of debte xxli, for whiche allso he remeyneth in the gaole, vnder the safe keepinge of the Bayllie for want of suerties, and is personallie to appeire at our nexte Courte, which is on Mondaye nexte, to answere the said action. But before his inlargement, I will take suche order as he shalbee sent over vnto your lordshippe, yf so it bee your pleasure. And as concernynge the semenarie, as your lordshippe wryteth, the cawse whye your honor was no soner certified of him, and sithence by the negligence of the messenger whom I put in truste for the carriage thereof, whoe shall truelie here of the same, as in my said lettre to your honor dothe appeyre. And thus humblie desireing your honors advice further concerninge him, with remembrance of my humble dutic, I humblie take my leave, Leicester this 24 of November 1599.

Youre honors humbly to commaunde (E. Newcome, Mayor).

Hall Papers II, No. 681. [Nov. 24, 1599.] Mr Maior, whereas you have written to me againe, as touchinge Matchet, I woulde have you, sithe there is an account layed vpon him by on Lytherland, to let the lawe take his course, yet after to keepe him safelie, for that as I heare there is other matter then you have written to me in his examynacion, whereof he is suspected, wherewith you have not acquaynted me, which yf I maye vnderstand from others, you shall answere it. Therefore kepe him till you certifie me of ye whole, and heare from me againe, for yat by his examinacion I finde, you might better have carted him and the whore, rather then have comytted him. For the semenaric, sith you have taken his examinacion (wherein you were too foreward before you had acquaynted me) see that he be safelie keept till you here further from me. And so I bidd you farewell. Ashbye Delazouch the xxiiiith November, 1599.

CCCXCIV. Letters to and from the Mayor.

Hall Papers II, No. 696. [Dec. 1599.] Mr Maior, where one James Charlton of Stopworth had a mare stollen about Whitsontyde last, and hath found out a prisoner within Leicester gaole, called George Sillits, alias Rodon, who confesseth the stealinge of her, I shall very hartelie pray you, because the gaoler dare not bringe the said prisoner before me, being afraied this last night that they would have burst out of the gaole, that you will take the paynes, in regard of equitie and charitie towardes the poore man, to examine him your self, who as he saieth will confesse where the mare is and who joyned with him in taking of her, which is requisite to be knowen. Yt should seeme that she is [in] the handes of one Drewrie of Flintam in Nottinghamsheire, with whome he sayeth he did exchange her, therefore it is most meet to vnderstand more of that Drewrie, for you well knowe that receivers are worse then theeues. So with very hartie commendacions I bid you farewell. From Aylston, this present Sondaye.

Hall Papers II, No. 843. [Dec. 6, 1599.] Sir J. Gray writes (as a Justice) asking that a prisoner T. Adcock be sent to him.

Ibid. No. 842. [Dec. 7, 1599.] (The Mayor to Sir J. Gray.) Sir, whereas you request me by your lettre, that I wold send Adcocke to your howsse to Brodgate, forthe of our libertie, nowe for answere whereof so yt ys that he was attached by your mans commaundement vpon felonye, and therewith before vs directly charged, and further that he should be forthcomynge to answere what should bee objected ageynst hym, and so do wee holde hym accordinglye, and the rather for that he hathe beene a man notoryouslye defamed and inioyethe his liefe but vpon his good behaviour, and further yf you will objecte any matter in particular agaynst hym, wee rest readye to examyne hym therevpon in your presence, yf so it please you. And thus hopinge your worshippe will require nothinge of vs, that maye eyther prejudice vs in our oathes, or infrindge our libertyes. With our hartye commendacions wee take our leaves. From Leicester, this viith of December 1599.

Youre very lovinge frendes, Edwarde Newcome, Maior. William Morton.

To the right worshipfull Sir John Graye, Knight.

Hall Papers II, No. 844. [Dec. 7, 1599.] (Sir John Gray to the Mayor.) Mr Maior, the cavse of my request was your promisse, which Morton and you made to mee the other daye, otherwise I would have don as my office should have borne mee oute in, and have him I will, eyther by my owne authoretie or by greater then myne;

therfore send him mee, for as I lyve I will trye all the friendes I have in England but I wilbee righted of this your fond and unjust dealinge with mee; lett him bee suer that yf this your crosse course bee to pleasure him, hee is much deceaved and shall fare the worse for yt. Further know, Mr Maior, you and your breethren have alreadie wronged me and all the rest of her Majesties justices in the shyre in takinge out of my handes that which nether belonged to you, nor your shalloe capasities could vnderstand. And of all men in the shyre, Mr Maior, you and your towne have no reason to offer mee this wronge, yf you looke well into the matter, for yf you bee able to crosse me in one thinge, I can requite your towne with twentie; and therefore I wishe you not to beginn with mee, for as I am a gentleman I wilbee revenged one waye or another to my contentment and to your dislikes. Therefore lett mee have your perfect answere for I vow, hee shall not be tryed by you nor none of you for this vngrateful fact don to mee. And let his copartner frow[ar]de1 him self in your towne as well as hee may, but at lenght I shall have him and this your dealinge shall make both him and manie other of your towne fayre the worse, vnlesse you alter this course you begin to take with From Brodgate this viith December 1599.

Yours as you vse me, J. Graye.

Hall Papers II, No. 711. [Dec. 21, 1599.] (The Recorder to the Mayor.) Right worshipfull Mr Maior, I receved vnderstandinge, youe desire my companye for keepinge the Quarter Sessions vpon Mondaie the 14th of Januarie, which daie (accordinge to your desire) I meane to be withe youe, and so I maie serve all partes; for I have not, nor will not, faile any parte; and allthoughe this is a differringe of one weeke, further than youe firste desired, yet (I truste) it will not be oute of tyme, nor hinderance to the greate lawiers, in goinge to the terme. And where youe sent your seriant, for my direccion, touching those that obstynate themselves againste your graunte<sup>2</sup>, made by her Maiestie, I accordinglie advised him sundrie waies of procedinge therin; howe his care and dilligence to apprehend that I advised, I knowe not, neither howe, nor what, youe have further doon therein. Hall Papers II, Nos. 707-708. [Dec. 30, 1599.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) Right honorable, our humble dewties premised; and may yt please your good lordshippe eftsoones to be remembered for the allowance of the countries yerely contribution of xiili. for the releiffe of the poore lazars in the spittle by Leicester, who by reason of the deniall thereof and restraynt from begging abroade (not havinge any other mayneteynance) are almost famished; and the rather, may yt please your good lordshippe, for that the contynuance thereof, heretofore, hath bene and no doubte vnder your lordshippe's correction, the maynetenance thereof nowe more and more wilbe moste serviceable and needfull to the wholle countie for the resceite of such lazars and other infectious poore impotent people, as by the countries meanes cheiffly and almost wholly the same is nowe charged with, beinge not fitt for any other place: And further, may yt please your good lordshippe, to be advertized, that yf the countrie should forget what ease the have and what an vnreasonable burden we dayly endure by the mayntenance of our poore at home (whereof the greatest part are caused and come by their meanes), and in an unneighbourly measure the relief of the spittle also vpon vs by pretence of the late Statute for releiffe of the poore1 and inlargement of our liberties2: Then may yt please your good lordship, as we judge it wold be bothe in conscience and proportion moste vnequall, and as we are advised (savinge favor) by that Statute that it is without warrant; for that thereby the poore prisoners in the Kinges Benche and Marshallsey and suche hospitalls and almes houses as shold be in any countie, whereof then this was and yet is the onely one in this countie for bothe Burrowe of Leicester and all the liberties thereof, though the be not of the countie but exempted, yet are the in the countie, shold be relieved by the generall weekely assessment of iid. in euery parishe in the wholle countie and not above, and the overplus thereof to be imployed to suche as sustayne losses by fire, water and other wise, after whiche proportion we will weekelye answere; but that, God wott, is nothinge towardes the maynetenaunce of the said spittle, beinge not above sixe porre parrishes with oure newe liberties also.

(To the Earl of Huntingdon from the Mayor and three brethren (named).)

Hall Papers II, No. 709. [Dec. 30, 1599.] Good Mr Maior, I am sorry I have not any other present than my vnfeyned love to retorne you in recompence of your kyndnes, which I protest in singlenes of my hart I owe you and the rest of our Corporation. But, syr, it is thought that your former guiftes and the favours I have formerlie receaved from your boroughe, have corrupted me and my affection towardes your selfe and your bretheren, in regard whereof I did once thinke to have sent backe your cost at this tyme bestowed on me, not that I would [not] have received your love therein but that I might the moer freely have objected that reproach which hath bin objected both against your selves, and me. But I could not tell howe you would take it, and therefoer I have thankfullie accepted the same, and doe desier that in requytall therof you would be pleased with the advise of some of your bretheren, to acquaint me with the power and efficacie of your charter, for the better warrantie of divers your actions which are nowe put in execution, as especyallie for barring straungers your markett, which doth breed mutch clamour and great offence in the countrie, and which course the gentlemen doe purpose to oppose you in: and as for this particuler, so for some other respectes, I design to be instructed, that I may the better aunswer and speak when opportunetie is offered, which I would gladlie doe, as well for your good as my owne creadytt; and I thinke the Quarter Sessions wilbe the tyme therfoer if your leasuer will permitt, ether this afternoone or tomorrowe, by one or two a clocke, I will wayte of you at your Hall; I desier to knowe your pleasuer, for because I cannot also attend you. And so with my faythfull promise of all fidelitie, wherto my oath bindeth me, to the good estate of Leicester, I take leave: Belgrave, this 30th December 1599.

Hall Papers II, No. 718. [Jan. 12, 1600.] (George Belgrave to W. Dethick.) Mr Derrick, In these matters of importaunce I may not with my creadyt delude men of sutch quallitie as I am to deal with, and therfoer I mervayle you send me a coppie but of part of the new ordynaunces, and leave out your determinations against glovers and fellmongers, I pray you insert in the note which I retorne you the resolutions concerning them, which be the cheif causers of this division. I love and affect plaine dealing, and therfoer desier other to be enterteyned in trust, wherto by my oath I am tyed, and whervnto my endeavours shall extend to deserve, or otherwise I intreat to be alltogeather secluded, which will breed my owne quiett and my lesst dislike amongest our gentlemen. It was agreed y<sup>at</sup> you should coppie foorth the whole and my selfe promised to reteyne it pryvate, and not to communicate or divuldge it further than to shewe the gentlemen ther error and misconceytes, wrongfullie grownded vppon ignorante and clamorous people, and therfoer blame me not if I be ieolous least you surmise that I will deale ether vnfaythfullie, or not providently in this matter. Assuer yourselves y<sup>at</sup> yf I doe you no good I will nether in this or any thing else doe you any harme: yf you purpose I shall labour further in this matter, send me the whole betymes in the morning. And ever so in haste I bid you farewell. Belgrave, this 12th Jan. 1599.

Your very loving frend, George Belgrave.

Hall Papers II, No. 721. [Jan. 18, 1600.] Mr Belgrave saythe that very lately at Sir John Grayes amongst dyvers other gentlemen, he hard Mr Thomas Cave saye that a man of his of a markytt daye before Xmas last was to have sold a beast hide in Leicester markytt, and there could not sell the same hide, except to a townesman, and that all the tanners of the contrye was exhibyted so as his man cold not sell his hyde except to a townes man, and therevpon was dryven to carrye it backe ageyne and so to Melton markett on the Tuesdaye next after.

CCCXCVIII. Negotiations on the question of Toll.

Hall Papers II, No. 727. [Jan. 29?, 1600.] (Stanford to the Mayor.) Sir, my duty remembred, I have accordinge to my best indevors laboured in your cause, and by this bearer have certified the hithertoo success thereof. The cause depending in ye duchy betweene ye towne and Worshipp is dismissed by order and rule of ye courte. And this day ye other cause for to be receaved hearinge, but ye determinacion thereof is deferred vntill yo Monday immediately before the end of this term for ye plaintiffs to shew further matter then yet is conceaved by ye courte. Our deedes receaved good allowance, with a generall consent, yat as well strangers as inhabitantes within the towne of Leicester should be dischardged from payment of toll, stallage, picage, tronage and thoroutoll according to the prescript of our Charter from the Duke of Lancaster. All the doubte then moved was in stallage alledged by them to be receaved by Mr Bayliffe, which they would gladlye obtayne if by any meanes a bad cause might prevayle. But for answeare to yat objection, we say yat her Maiesties Bayliffe receaveth rent for certein shopps and little tenementes in the markett place erected vpon ye Queenes wast, for which Mr Bayliffe doth yerely accompt, which rent so receaved for the shopps was not intended, as we take it, to be deuised and granted vnto ye complainant by ye name of stallage1. In which answeare Mr Attorney seemed to be satisfyed for that objection. As for all other stalls of ye shambles and drapery and sheep penns before deuised vnto Mr Catlyn<sup>2</sup> and purchased by the towne in fee farme, vpon shewing the grant thereof, the complainant shalbe excluded and forbarred. So that very little is like to befall them vpon this sute, and if any thinge happen to profite them, yet I hope it wilbe without prejudice to vs. For the perfecting hereof, I humbly pray you, to sent by John Clarke ye bearer hereof ye grant of your fee farme, with a certificat from your Mr Bayliffe and ye rest of the manor of this supposed stallage objected by ye complainant to be receaved. If you could procure ye sending vp of Mrs Catlynes lease, it would perhaps much pleasure vs. In this buisines our diligence hathe not beene wantinge nor searches forslowed, nor meanes omitted, which althoughe they be meanes of greate charge and expence, yet I hope to compasse an end of those sutes, with gavne of creditt to the towne, and purchasing ve love of ve countrey, for a parte thereof, which was assented to have beene geven for a disgracefull and odious composicion. Thus expecting an answeare and returne of those thinges with as much expedition as you may, with my hartye commendacions to your worshippe, I humblye take my leave. From my chamber, in Grais Inn. This 39th (sic) day of January.

Your loving cosen at commandment,

ing toll and stallage of the markets and fairs of Leicester pretended to be concealed from H.M. and whereof a lease was granted under the Duchy seal to Randall Manynge and by him assigned to the said complainants. After evidence shewn in court before Mr Baron Clerke and other commissioners, it appears that the Mayor and burgesses of Leicester and all other persons as well freemen as strangers and foreigners ought to be discharged of all toll, stallage, picage, tronage and thorough toll in Leicester and the suburbs and tollmarks thereof for any matter yet shaped (sheiped) in H.M.'s behalf. The privilege granted under the seal of Henry Duke of Lancaster is confirmed: saving always to H.M. and her heirs and successors such right and title to the said toll as shall at any time hereafter appear to be due. Hall Papers II, No. 852. (Undated petition from the Mayor.) To the Right Honorable Mr Thomas Egerton, Knighte, Lorde Keeper of the Great Seale of Englande.

In moste humble wise sheweth vnto your good lordshippe your honors suppliant Edwarde Newcome Maior of her Maiesties borrowe of Leicester, that whereas that corporation hath beene heretofore by some of our auncient chartres called the borrowghe of Leicester and by some other the towne of Leicester, and nowe latelye by a chartre graunted by the Oueenes moste excellent Maiestie that nowe is, newlye incorporate, the jurisdiction inlarged and called the borrowe of Leicester, whereuppon this last yeere, by your lordshippes speciall order, the commission for assessinge the subsidie was made accordinglie. And whereas (albeitt the appoyntinge of commissioners for the subsidie with us is and hath beene your lordshipps and your predicessors most absolute righte) yett maye itt please your good lordshipp, usuallie heretofore there hathe not beene anye forreyne commissioner for the subsidie within the corporation, butt suche as the towne hathe in some sorte commended to your lordshipp or your predicessors, yett soe itt is, maye itt please your good lordshipp, that I have nowe received a commission for taxinge this present subsidie by the name of the towne of Leicester, without any speciall mencion of our newe liberties by theire names, wherein allso Sir John Graye knight1 is nowe newelie named a commissioner with us, to our further burden and charge, albeitt wee have, besides him, as many commissioners of the countye as ever were, and those gentlemen of speciall name and truste, as namely Mr Tho. Cave one of the deputie Leivetenantes, Mr Hen. Cave, whoe hath bene, and Mr Geo. Bellgrave who nowe is Sheyriffe of the Countie, and this number, yea fewer, hath bene thoughte burdensome inoughe to our poore corporation. And Sir John Grayes threatninge of revenge vnto vs, bothe by wordes and lettre is and hathe beene suche as we greatelie feare his indifferencie<sup>2</sup>. In tender consideration whereof maye itt please your good lordshipp to disburden vs of Sir John Graye, and cawse this commission to be made accordinge to the laste, and so wee shalbee better able to parforme her Maiestie the servise and dutie expected, especiallie in our newe liberties, and bounden daielie to praye to God lonnge to preserve your good lordshipp in all earthlie honor and in heavenlye felicitye for ever to endure.

Memorandum that the commission for the said subsidie was renewed by the name of the burrowe of Leicester as well within liberties as withoute, togeither with their newe liberties etc. But Sir John Graye, knight, colde not be gott oute of the commission, wherevoon Sir Ed. Hastinges, knight, was put into the commission. So there is nowe these commissioners viz. The Maior of Leicester, Sir Ed. Hastinges, knight, Sir John Graye, knight, Tho. Cave, Richard Parkyns Recorder of the Burghe of Leicester, Henry Cave, George Belgrave, James Clark, William Morton and Robert Heyrycke, or any twoe of them.

CCCCXI. Scheme for the purchase of wool.

Hall Papers II, No. 862. [Aug. 22, 1600.] (The Mayor to Sir A. Noel<sup>1</sup>.) Sir, our heartie commendacions remembred etc. May yt please you to be certified, that the Queenes most excellent Maiestie that now ys (moste gratiously affectinge the good of our corporacion, and especiallye the setting of the poore on worke for their better relieffe and mayntenance) hathe granted vnto vs a most free markett for buynge and sellinge of wooll and woollen yarne within our towne. And to the intent this her Maiesties most royall favour should take effecte accordinge to her gracious good purpose therein, we have made a very fitt Woollhall with convenient storehouses, and proclaymed our markett dayes Wednesday, Fryday and Saturdaye weekelye. And for as much as wee may not buy wooll but in our Woolhall, neither to sett our poore on worke, nor to furnishe our hall for sale bringe yt in tradinge, and for as muche also as the countrie is not yet acquaynted with our wooll markett beinge proclaymed but Saturday laste, and that there is nowe some more of buyers then sellers, wee have therefore made bold to intreate your worshipp especially, amongst some others of the cheifest growers of our good neighbors and countriemen, to creditt our Woollhall with sale of there wooll, where the shall have suche present price for the same as yt is nowe worthe, or securitie to their likinge that will sell vpon tyme, and good securitie for the safetie of their wooll, which will bringe yt thither and will stay for further sale, for which purpose we have sent this bearer, John Clarke, one of our officers, with this our lettre to your worshipp, earnestly intreatinge your favour in this respecte, in grantinge our requeste, in forwardinge this good purpose of our most gracious soveraigne, wherein wee the rather presume for that we have ever founde, and more doe dayly heare of, your worshipps inclination to the good of our poore corporacion. And thus cravinge your worshipps answere hereof by this bearer, wee leave you to the most merciffull protection of the Lord Jesus: this 22nd of August 1600.

Your worshipps verie lovinge frende Edward Newcome, Maior.

To the right worshipfull Sir Andrewe Nowell, Knight.

Hall Papers III, No. 864. [Aug. 24, 1600.] Sir A. Nowell's reply. He will try to help if the matter does not cause him too much loss.

Ibid. No. 870. [Sep. 2, 1600.] Sir A. Nowell replies that he may lose customers for his wool if he deals with Leicester only for a year. He offers to deal with them at a fixed price for seven years, weighing the wool as soon as it is woven, or if they will give bond to become his chapmen for life, he will take the best current price. That whereas by the reason of the manie trobells there, he is nowe desirous to settle him selfe within this towne, to thentente to keepe the poore on worke, by imployeinge his smale stocke: And for that your suppliaunt will not enterprise the same withoute your good wills and likinge, he moste humblie beseichethe your lawefull favores, that vpon reasonabell consideracone, he maie be admytted to be incorporated as a freeman, for the which your suppliaunte wilbe verie thankfull, and willinge to answere suche duties as in equitie shall be imposed vppon him: And for the better testimonye of your suppliauntes carriage and behaviore heretofore, it maie appeare by a testimonie vnder the handes of the Privie Counsell in Irelande, as alsoe by the Maior of Dublin vnder his office, withe the cities seale anexed. And for further certificate hereof, the right worshipfull Sir Henrie Harington Knight is well pleased, to testifie the same. And for your worshipps favores herein, youre said suppliaunte shalbe ever bownd etc.

Hall Papers III, No. 8. (Undated petition from the same.) Most humbly shewythe vnto your worshypes your suppliant John Frythe, that wheareas he hathe bene hearetofore an humble suttor vnto the worshypefulle Master Mayore and the rest of the Aldermen hys bretherne, to be admytted into your socyete and corporatyone of thys towne to macke hys abode and dwelling heare, pretendinge1 to have set the poure on worcke, and now havinge to hys great charge madde tryalle of the place, dothe fynd that thear ys not suffycyent water abought the sayd towne, ether for mackynge collors, or blechinge of lynane, wheareby your suppliant shall be dryven to provyd some other place fyt for yat porposse; and for as muche as your sade suppliant hathe not bene by any meanes chargable to the sayd towne, he humblye cravythe tollerance for yat fyne which was impossed vpon hym by your favors to be remytted, yf yt so happene yat he do remove; otherwysse he shalbe wyllinge to fulfyll and acomplyche the same, and in so doinge the premysys consydered he shall aknollege hym sellfe most dewly bound.

CCCCXIV. The Earl on Leicester market.

Hall Papers II, No. 876. [Sept. 10, 1600.] Mr Maior, I have been often moved by the inhabitantes of Loughborowe that they maye vse your markett as heretofore they have done, and for that purpose the last weeke sent my man to Leicester to speake with yow about yt, and your beinge not at home was cause that he loste that labour; nowe I am advertised that of some of them ther hathe bene processe since served to answeare that matter. I can be but sorrye to see suche courses performed, contrarye, as I take yt, to all equitye or lawe, vf the right of thinges were handled in ther kynde; moreover a generall hurte, as yt maye well be supposed, will herevpon ensue, not onlye to your towne ytself but to the wholl cuntrye besides, which is the cheefeste matter yat I looke after, althoughe I trusted your promise that no sute should be begune for the same. Therefore lett me intreate you to staye further inconveniences, to ceasse the sute begun<sup>1</sup>, and to suffer those inhabitantes to vse your markett as they before have done. Wherein I shall not onelye hold myself kyndelye vsed, but be forwarde to doe your towne as great a pleasure vppon anye motion made vnto me for yt. Otherwise I must give yow notice that I will doe my best to releive them and make myself a partie to the sute. And so with my commendacions bid yow right hartelye farewell. Ashebye Dalazouche the xth of September 1600.

CCCCXIX. Notes of various town suits etc.

Hall Papers III, No. 4. [Oct. 15, 1600.] Letter from the Mayor and Brethren to Mr Baston one of the attorneys in the Star Chamber at his lodgings in Gray's Inn: asking his former accustomed care in the town's suit against foreign tradesmen trading contrary to custom and charters: a fee of 6s. 8d. sent, and list of persons served with "suppeyneys."

Ibid. No. 5. [Oct. 17, 1600.] Will. Peche acknowledges receipt of an indenture of articles between the Mayor and burgesses and John Lyster gent., an obligation to perform the articles and a paper of orders touching the closes in the Frith.

Dethick notes the return of the same, Jan. 1601.

Ibid. No. 6. [Oct. 29, 1600.] Examination of Edward Perkyn, apprentice of Mr Morton an Alderman, linen draper, on the delivery of certain stuffs "myllyon fusteyn" and cambric.

Ibid. No. 13. [Oct. 29, 1600.] The Earl of Huntingdon to the Mayor on behalf of Hugh King<sup>2</sup> of Sileby who served his apprenticeship and was made free and put to a yearly fine of 2s. which he has paid to the Chamberlains ever since: now it is proposed to expel him unless he pays the greater fine or makes his abode in Leicester. The Earl asks that he be admitted according to the service of apprenticeship.

Ibid. No. 7. [Nov. 21, 1600.] Mr Lyster having refused Mr Bowes' offer of a composition of £100 (whereas he agreed to take £90 as appears from Mr Peck's letter) there shall be no composition with him further than some reasonable gratuity for his pains and friendship.

Mr Freake undertook to provide 6 score "rooks3" of coal to serve the poor from the "towne cownte" for a year, at 7d. the hundred. He shall have the use of that part of the old hall which was used for coal and the stock of money of the coal and the use of the weights and "ballonses" for £8. 6s. 8d. with option of renewing the bargain. If he refuses, then he is to pay the stock of money to the chamberlains. The chamberlains received 12d. in earnest for the performance of the bargain.

Searchers appointed for hides, tallow, skins and fells.

Hall Papers III, No. 1. [Dec. 3, 1600.] <sup>1</sup>Draft of a letter from the Mayor and Brethren to the Earl of Huntingdon who has written on behalf of Hugh King of Sileby tanner, made free of Leicester, that he be not expelled. The records have been searched and the facts are stated. The Earl has been misinformed. He never paid fine, as the Chamberlains' accounts shew. But they will let him compound. They ask that their dispute with the Loughborough tradesmen may be remembered so that they may be brought to acknowledge the Queen's grant to Leicester for admittance of their trading: "so that as our grant is general so the acknowledgment therof maybe answerable."

Hall Papers III, No. 15. [Dec. 12, 1600.] Henry Beaumont to the Mayor on behalf of Mrs Freeman cess'd in the subsidy as one of the corporation, she dwelling within (the) Newark, "a liberty I have taken & hold from H. M. by a lease before you graunted." He has shewn the matter to the Recorder and others of the Brethren and marvels "this should be offered" to him again. "I would be glad I might enjoy that which is my owne with all your leaves, but yf their be no remedy but that this course must be taken against me, without the consent of some of them which were commissioners with you, as they have told me, I must defende my right & will doe, & take noe wronge yf by lawe or right I canne helpe it<sup>2</sup>."

CCCCXX. Taxation of the Borough.

Hall Book III, p. 198. [Dec. 19, 1600.] (Copy of a letter from the Earl.) Mr Maior, the laste service commaunded from Her Maiestie, & the Councell, to be levied within my Levetenauncye, I spared your towne. Nowe have I an newe commaundement lately come to me, for the leyinge of certene men oute of this Countie for the like service. Towardes the which, I will onlie chardge one man to be provided oute of your towne; and because for the other services heretofore manye of the meanest sorte of your towne have beene driven to laye downe there porcions equall with those of better wealthe and accompte then themselves, I have thought good for theire better ease and quyetinge of there dislikes (and lykewise regardinge not to over presse the better sorte) to make nominacion of sixe suche, thoughe one of them were well hable to beare it, to furnishe this man by you to be appoynted with murryane, bandylo3, calyvare, sworde & girdle; likewise for coate, dooblitt & hoose let them send with the man, to answere that chardge, with the conduct money also: and what that will come to, they shalbe theire owne witnesses, and paie it. The sixe persons that I will have chardged for the furnishinge of this man are Robertt Heyrycke, Will<sup>m</sup> Morton, Thomas Clarke, Will<sup>m</sup> Noryce, Thomas Chapman and James Ellice, whoe if they or anye of them, vpon your knowledge given me, dislike of it, let me presentlye be informed, that Her Maiesties service be not hindered nor neclected—for the choyce of the man, see theire bee speciall care had, that he bee verie sufficient & able, of gode carriadge, & honest conversacion of liefe, of strounge constitucione of bodye, fitt for warr service, and that hee bee suche a one as have skill in shootinge in a peece, eyther in fowlinge peece or other; & likewise that you take one that is either a carpenter, a smythe, a sadler, a brickleyar, or a hewarre of stonne, if any suche bee in your towne fitt for this service; and that you have special regard for the selectinge of the man to be as is aforesaid, & noe vagarant or suspected persone, or likelye to rune away; and that they fayle not to bringe or send hym to Ashebye Delazouche on Sayturdaye the XXVIIth of this December by tenne of the clocke in thaffore noone, then & theire to bee readye with the reste, forthwith to bee delyuered over to suche as I shall appoynte for the conductinge of them to the said porte of Chester, hereof fayle they not at theire vttermoste perilles, as they, or anye of them will answere the contrarye. Donyngton Parke this XIXth of December 1600.

> Your loving frende George Huntingdon.

To my lovinge frende, Mr Mayor of Leicester, give theise, withe speede.

Hall Papers III, No. 16. [Dec. 20, 1600.] (The Mayor and Aldermen to the Earl of Huntingdon. They will have a man ready at Ashby as required: not doubting that the charge may be laid on the whole town as heretofore.) "Wee do thincke that it wilbe a meane to sett greater discretion amongest us, & dyvers of us are deper charged in subsidies & privy seales when others have not been towched, which wee thinck might as well have been nominated as ourselves. And whereas your honor saythe that the meyner sorte of our towne have beene dryven to ley downe there porcens with those of better welthe then themselves, we are able to prove unto your honor that yt ys not soe, but that the Mayor and Justices do proporcion suche charges (so neyre as they can) accordinge to everye mans habillytie."

Hall Book III, p. 199. [Jan. 16, 1601.] A Taxacion, xxiinti. Firste itt is agreed, that the XXIIIIti Aldermen shalbee devided into three VIIIts, and the firste Eight to be taxed att iiili. apeece, And the seconde Eight, to bee taxed at xlvis. viiid. apeece, And the third Eight, to bee taxed att xxxiiis. iiiid. apeece.

A taxacion, xLvIII<sup>ti</sup>. Also itt is agreed that the eight and fortie burgesses shalbee devided into three sixteenes. And the firste xvi<sup>en</sup> to bee taxed at xxvis. viiid. apeece. And the second xvi<sup>en</sup> att xxs. apeece. And the thirde xvi<sup>en</sup> to be taxed att xiiis. iiiid. apeece.

A taxacion ouer the Commoners. Also it is further agreed, that all ye beste Commoners (beinge free Burgesses) shalbee also taxed, accordinge to theire severall habilities. And further it is agreed by the greater parte nowe assembled, that theise taxacions aboue specified, to stande firme and staple, and to bee presentlye collected and gaythered vppe. And to bee absolutely and freelye geven to the towne, for and towardes the payment of Mr Elcocke his debte, and Mr Chapman his debt etc.

Item itt is further agreed and also ordered, that this present taxacion bee not a president for anye suche taxacion hereafter.

Also itt is further agreed, that for and towchinge the charges of the laste soldyar sent into Ireland (accordinge to the lettre aboue written) that the one halfe thereof (notwithstandinge the said lettre) shall bee borne by the towne, and shalbe presently payde by the Chambarlyns of the Burrowe of Leicester, to the parties charged by the said lettre, to sett fourthe the said soldyar.

[Jan. 22, 1601.] Concerning the suit of the Closes etc. (Concerning the suit betwixt the town and Mr Lyster, it is referred to our counsel, to deal herein either by the common law or by suit in the Chancery or both as they shall think best.)

(p. 200.) [Jan. 31, 1601.] Towchinge the former taxacion etc. (The assessment of 16 Jan., agreed to be given to the town, shall be lent till the first lease of the Granges shall be ended, and repaid within a year after the expiration of the lease.) And this money not to be put to any other use then only for the payinge of the townes debte. And whosoeuer dothe refuze to paye the taxacion or some of money ymposed upon him to be commytted to warde and there to remayne untill he do paye the same. And itt ys further ordered that the severall names of all the said lenders to bee recorded in the Towne Book. (The names of the three Eights and Sixteens follow.)

Hall Papers III, No. 58. [Ap. 16, 1601.] (The Earl to the Mayor.) Mr Maiore, whereas I am gyven to vnderstand of some injuries offerd in your towne of Leicester to Mistris Catlyn<sup>1</sup>, her Maiesties tenaunte of the Shambles and draperye there, by sufferinge drapers to sett vp staules and standings in your faires and markitts, whereby her Maiesties house erected for yat purpose (beinge vnfurnyshed) will soone be ruinated and the tenaunte inhabled for want of reformacone of theise wrongs done vnto her since the deathe of her husbond to paye the Queene her rent: This seemeth to me to be a matter which you should not suffer, the reformacone whereof tendinge so muche to the good of yourselves, in regard you have gotten theis thinges on fee farme, for the more the house is frequented the more it tends to the good of the Queene and yourselves when your tyme cometh. I have bene intreated to wrighte vnto you, beinge willinge to aide her herein, to desire you to fullfill the promises made by some of your predicessors in this case which they have not performed, that suche as offer wronge by absentinge themselves from the draperye maye by you be compelled to repaire to the place for that vse builte, whereby the house may be mayntayned, the rent to the Queene paide, and the tenaunte by your good reformacone, which I doubte not of, eased of further trooble. And so assueringe myself yat you will not be vnmyndfull herein, I comitt you to the proteccione of thalmyghtie. Donington Parke, this xvith of Aprill 1601.

Hall Papers III, No. 651. [June 14, 1601.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) Right honorable, our humble dutyes remembered, maye it pleaze your good lordshippe to be advertysed that yesterdaye abowte fyve of the clocke in thafternoone theire was a greate broyle made in our towne betweene Mr Skeffyngton, and one Thomas Burrowes, of Burrough, as wee are informed, with manye partakers on boathe sydes, as this bearer, Henry Benyngton, can informe your honour more at lardge. Vpon the which broyle we caused proclamacion to be made in her Maiesties name, for the keepinge of the peace, and after the proclamacion made the said Burrowes was founde so vnrewlye, and vnderstandinge [him] to be one of the principall partyes, we commytted hym to her Maiesties gaole of our towne, where he still remaynethe; And after the heat qualyfyed2, caused the said Burrowes to come before vs, who dyd then mightyly complayne ageynst the said Mr Skeffyngton of greate menasinge, and wee dowbt that there ys greate mischeefe lickly to fawle owte, vpon this browle, vnles your honour take order therein, with those whom wee can reache beinge forthe of our libertye. Thus leavinge the rest of the wholl circumstance to this bearer, who can truly informe the wholl proseadinge therein to your honour, wee humbly take our leaves: Leicester, this Sondaye mornynge the xiiiith of June 1601.

Your honours humbly to commande Robert Gyllott, Mayor.

Hall Papers III, No. 64. [June 14, 1601.] (The Earl to the Mayor.) Mr Maior, I have received your lettre this xiiijth of June and I am sory to fynde, yat either broyle or outrage should be comytted in your towne, to the disturbaunce or hurte of her Maiesties subjectes. And where you write I should take informacion more at large of this bearer (who I knowe will reporte nothinge but truth vnto me), yet let me intreate you, to examyne the cawse more largelier, that I may be from yourselfe informed of this outragious matter, and what persons were present at it, because I would avoyde the dangers you stande in feare of maye proceede hereafter. are Justices of Peace, dwellinge in your towne and neare your towne, which methinkes you should have made acquaynted with this account, and I thinke would have joyned with you to have suppressed this outrage. I know you may easilie come to be rightelie informed, and then I praye you let me be by you rightely informed, and you shall finde me I will carefullie regard the execucion of my dutie to

So commendinge my selfe vnto yow, I commytt you to Godes moste mercyfull protection: Donington Parke, the xiiiith June 1601.

Your lovinge frend George Huntingdon.

Hall Papers III, No. 82. [July 9, 1601.] (The Earl to the Mayor.) Mr Maior, I have received informacion agaynst Richard Yates and one Raynescrofte (that have bene great distroyers and staylers of her Maiesties deare within Leicester forrest) who latelie being therewith taken have bene therevppon examined; which examinacion althoughe but simple, yet ther former trespasses joyned therewith is sufficient to procure ther punishment further then I will inflicte vppon them. Yet notwithstanding I praye yow presentlie to cause them to be apprehended and committed to your towne gaole, ther to remayne till order be further taken for them, either by my self or suche as have aucthoritie to deale for ther inlargement. And so with my hartie commendacions bid you farewell: From Donington Parke this ixth of Julye 1601.

Your lovinge frende George Huntingdon.

Hall Papers III, No. 84. [July 15, 1601.] (The Mayor to the Earl.) My humble dutie vnto your good lordshippe remembred: vnderstandinge by your late lettre you have hard we have helde a sessions abowte the ryott lately commytted in our towne, whereof your lordshippe wold have bene advertised before our proceedinges, maye it please your good lordshippe, the truthe is, I did not thincke theire wolde have beene anye suche cause before Mondaye the vith of Julye last, att which tyme Mr Baron Savile (beinge att my howsse) advised me to make inquirye thereof within the moneth (which was then to be ended on Saturdaye next after) beinge the xith daye of Julye last past, or els I did forfytt 100/i., whose advise I did followe, and sent presentlye therevpon to Mr Recorder to that effecte, who (not knowinge thereof before) did appoynt the said sessions to be holden (for the same enquirye) vpon Thursday the ixth of the said Julye, which was performed accordingly, accordinge to the statute<sup>1</sup>; att which sessions was Mr Skeffington and sixe of his servantes indited, and Tho. Mr Maior, after my hartiest commendacions, touching your riott above written, I never hard any woord thereof and therefore there was some want in that I was not doon¹ to vnderstand the same. But nowe I here of it, I will not faile, God willinge, to be withe youe vpon Thursdaie next. And intreate Mr Bellgrave to be theire, to geve in evidence for the Queene. I woulde be there rather todaie then tomorrowe, but that I knowe Mr Bailie cannot gett there, that should, to appere² so spedilie. Suche is allwaies their neglecte, in her Maiesties service in suche cases. And so I commend youe to the kepinge of Allmightie. This Tuesdaie the viith of Julie.

Hall Papers III, No. 96. [Aug. 18, 1601.] (The Recorder to the Mayor.) Mr Maior, after my hartiest commendacions: touchinge that ye write to Mr Okes his passporte, as to myne vnderstandinge, by extremytic of lawe (wherevnto we are all bounde by our oathe to God, and dutie to our moste gracious Soveraigne) the same is not allowable. The reasons that perswade me therevnto, arre by our bookes, who saie vnto vs, that proteccions arre by the statute (13 R. 2. ca. 16. et vide auxi ca. 12) wherin are three sortes viz. in a viage ryall to gooe, or in other busynes of the realme, as to go in an embassie to a forren potentatie, sent by her Maiestie, or to abide for the kepinge of any forte or victualyng thereof. And these thre arre derived from the two sortes of proteccions, called or termed proteccions Quia moratur, Et quia profecturus. And also it is not allowable (if it be under the Privie Sealle) but of necessitie it must be vnder the Greate Seall. Nor a proteccion Quia profecturus is not allowable, but where the partie goethe in a viagge roiall, or for greate busynes of the realme. And a viagge roiall shalbe taken to be, where the kinge goethe with his armye in person, or that he maketh a generall of an armye to invade Fraunce, or other straunge enemy out of his owne domynions, nor the same can indure above a yere or a lesse tyme, which must be certeyne, for the same proteccion maie not be allowed for a jorney or armye sent within the kinges domynions. And the booke is expresselie, that a proteccion in a viagge roiall into Ireland shall not be allowed, for that the same kingdome of Ireland is within the jurisdiccion of the kingdom of England. And a prisoner in execucion vppon a condempnacion could not be licensed by the Quene with a keeper to go vnto Barwicke for defence thereof, although he were a necessarie man therefore (quod vide Dier2). And althoughe Irreland be subjecte to England, yet it is a kingdome of itself, and a pere or noble man of that realme for rebellion or treason comyttedd there shalbe tried by his peeres in Ireland and not in England, which proves (in my conceite) that allthoughe my lord deputie be a greate man, and as I maie terme him a vice pere, yet in England (it semethe to me)

his passe porte is not of greter force then the Queenes proteccion ys in England, as I have shewed youe before, so as my poore opynion apperethe to youe herein. And as touchinge your desire to knowe my opynion touching your maymed sowdier, I thinke it best youe answere the Justices, that youe arre not yet resolved; for that your Recorder is redden from home; so as [for] the shortnes of the tyme [youe] could not satisfie yourselves withe a resolved answere to them presentlie. And so kepe yourself from them close, that they vnderstand not your intent what to do therein. And in the meane tyme (seinge your lettre is from the bodie of the Councell, which in all dewtie youe arre to answere) youe arre to drawe a lettre to their lordshippes, with all circumstaunces, to satisfie their lordshippes with the resons whie youe take yourselves to be discharged from the said charge, and not in any wise make the said Justices privie to your answeres, nor what you meane to do therein. For to make them privie weere to arme your adversaries in this cawse with matter to replie afreshe against youe to your disadvauntage. And rather because it apperethe to me by your lettre there is oone1, that of humor followethe, withe all he maie, to your prejudice, therefore if youe be of my mynde, lett Mr Dethick (who is secrete) drawe (roughlie) a lettre withe all he can allege to my said lordes, in your favor. And if youe send him over to me therwith I shall pervse and penne in the best sorte I can, to the end youe maye not be crossed with these humors, which I would willinglie have nowe doon, but the tyme was too shorte, and I dreven therebie to knowe firste your myndes and resolusion touchinge the same. And if youe shewe this my lettre to any, folde the same in the myddes that they maie not vnderstand nor perceave this latter parte. For the firste parte is matter of lawe, which parte I care not who shall see. Thus with my whoole affeccion, and whoole abilitie, I desire your good, and that my counsell maie take no worse interpretacion then is by me singlelie and sincerlie intended, and shall be performed, with all I maie, to effecte all to your good. This 18th of Auguste.

Hall Papers III, No. 120. [Oct. 31, 1601.] (The Earl to the Mayor.) Mr Maior, I do thanke you for sendinge me that letter and for the withholdinge of Adcocke from beinge bayled and I praye you still contynue in your safe custodye, for I have greater matters to laye to him, then yet is fit for me to acquaynt anye bodye withall, and am sorye that Mr Skeffingtone should enter hymself into this accione for so lewde a person; it should greatly have gladded me, to have had hym have followed the wise and discreete dealinge of his father, yat he myght the sooner have possessed his place which he in creedit held in the countrye. And can be but sorrye yat it is not soe; but for ye person in goale I praye you let hym be well and narowely looked vnto for feare of escapeinge; and for the threates gyven you as appeares by your letter I will stand betwixe you and your harmes in this accione, and if he spends fyve hundred poundes as he saithe he will, to bayle hym, assure yourself I will delyver hym to the Counsell before he be sett at lybertie. And whereas he threatneth you with an accione of false imprisonment laye it vpon me yat it is my acte and not yours, and as it is, so I will defend you in it. And so commendinge myself vnto you I commytt you to the Lordes protection. Doningtone todaye this laste of October 1601

CCCCXXVIII. A lawyer's advice to the borough1.

Hall Papers III, No. 162. [Dec. 7, 1601.] (James Whitelocke to John Clark.) John Clerk, bycaus my leasure will not serve to dilate more then I must necessarily and I know I may be boldest to be irregular in my writing with you, I have thought good to direct my letters to you out of which you may enform Mr Maier and his bretheren that which shold concern them. I have had long discourse withe Mr Brogrove<sup>2</sup>, who being a judge in that court cannot give a resolution of successe in our cause, but by his opinion the surmise of your decay which tendethe to the injury of the feefarm oughte properly to be examined therein, and that the complaynt will best be exhibited in the name of the Maior and community3, who may bothe desire the meanet4 of that court for the upholding of the publique estate mutche decayed by the decreasing of the inhabitants, which growethe through the equality of priviledges to yourselves and foreners, and unequality in taxes and burdens, besides the priviledges themselves being sutche as ar now enjoyed by most of the boroughes and cities in England other by prescription or the princes grants: and herupon you may demand a decree of that court against those that impeache them, upon which decree you may ever after have powers of contempt if they demur in your charter for that poynt, you may have a fair and publique triall of the law and not be cast out of the court without defence, and that will be very convenient for you to bring it to a triall, for, by that, you shall either have it confirmed to yow or be thoroughly instructed of the defects and so proceed more directly to procure a letter. Upon those reasones that we are to pretend for our releef in this case was the statute of I and 2 P. and M. ca. 7 made, out of the preamble of which statute I mean to derive matter for our purpose...the opinion commonly received that they may at their liberty buy and sell in any other market town bycaus they dwell in on<sup>5</sup>, is quite mistaken, for it quite overthwarteth the purpose of the statute which is that those of other townes sholde not gather the wealthe of townes, where they were not enhabitants, by retayling in them...bothe myself and my ancients<sup>1</sup> do think that you may punishe them by that statute...

I had the perusal of your petition to the Queen and did extracte of it the note of those things which were denyed yow.

- I. The first was the erection of your towne to a county.
- 2. The second was the repealing of all markets within 8 miles of you, whiche was a very unfit demand, for if they be hurtfull unto you and weare granted since yeares<sup>2</sup> you may appeal them by law; if they are ancienter then yeares<sup>2</sup> then [you] sholde annoy them in repealing them, so for that second matter, the common law will releev you as your case standeth and therefore you had no need to renew that request.
- 3. The third matter denyed you was the raysing of a toll on those that passed besides your towne; that is somewhat an unusual matter and nevertheless may be helped by you other as by stopping of pastures in the enclosing, if they be made thoroughe youre common feilde.
- 4. The last matter not granted yow was the presenting of the almes people by the Maior to the Hospitall, which you may dispose of in that sort if you be carefull to keep one of your people in the place of minister.

CCCCXXX. Papers on Borough Suits.

Hall Papers III, No. 150. [Dec. 22, 1601.] <sup>3</sup>(Sir F. Hastings to the Mayor.) Master Mayor, I can challenge no kindnes from the towne of Lecester, being a stranger farre off in dwelling, but I dare boldly say that in my time I have shewed myselfe a kinde frende to Lecester and careful for Lecester, and if this be no lesse gratefully remembred, then I did lovingly performe it, I shal finde it by your cariage towards my servant Francis Archer<sup>4</sup>, for whom I desire nothing but that he may have his right from you without law, and that his wante of ability may not hinder him which it might nedes doe if you drive him to sute; and therfore all that I desire is, that if you wil not of your selfes leave to him that law hathe layed upon him, yet some gentlemen in the country may heare it and ende it without law. And so hoping to finde you willing to satisffy me in so reasonable a request. With my hearty commendacions I leave you to God. From London the 22 of December 1601.

Hall Papers III, No. 144b. [Undated.] (The Mayor to Mr Beaumont.) Sir, whereas there hath bene some difference between this corporacion of Leicester and yourself for jurisdiccion within the Newark, which hath bene reserved to view of Councell on both sides, with this that there shold no alteracions be had vntill grave advise of those lerned in the lawe was first taken therein: Pleaseth you to vnderstand that nowe the taxacion of the subsedy for this burgh of Leicester with the new liberties annexed is presently to be dealt in, and there is alredy advise taken of verie good councell extant vnder there handes, whereby it appereth that there is no doubt of the Newark to be comprehended within her Maiesties graunt and vnyted to this incorporacion; and although the taxacion of the residauntes within the said Newark tendeth to her Maiesties better servyce, yet I myself with the rest of my brothers have thought good before we enter into that service to acquaint you therewith, for yat you should not take offence yat it were done without your privitie.

This letter not sent to Mr Beamounte.

Hall Papers III, No. 144<sup>2</sup>. [Jan. 4, 1602.] Fyrst att this Common Hawle it was agreed by the greater parte nowe assembled, not to gyve Master Lyster a hundred markes for compozycion for oure closes, vnles hee wyll secure vs for our tytle therein. But rather to answere hym to the lawe, or att the counsell table. Nota, that all those that are totted thus (o) are of the lesser nomber, and those which are vntotted in that sorte are the greate number<sup>3</sup>.

Hall Papers III, No. 151. [Jan. 8, 1602.] To the right honorable Sir John Fortescue, Knight, Chancellor of her Maiesties Duchie of Lancaster. Humbly sheweth vnto your honor your supliant Randall

Mannynge of London, merchant, that whereas in the XLth yeare of her Maiesties raigne (Sir Robert Cecyll beinge then Chancellor of her Maiesties Duchie of Lancaster) there was a lease graunted vnto your supliant vnder the duchie seale of certayn toles and stallages of the fayres and markettes within the town of Leicester, as thinges concealed from her Maiestie (exceptinge the sheep pennes and buchers shambles, which are graunted in fee farme to the Maior and Burgesses of that towne) which lease beinge resisted and withstood by the said Maior and Burgesses, your supliant for his releife preferred a bill agaynst them in the Duchie Court, wherevnto they answered and alledged vat they and all others resortinge to the sayd towne were freed from payinge any such dueties by reason of a certayne Mannor called Wrangle which they pretend their predecessors gave to Henry Duke of Lancaster vpon yat condicion, and that the freedome of toles hath bene ever kept since yat time, wherevpon the court decreed that it should be so contynued. Howbeit if it may please your honor it is sythence found amongst her Maiesties recordes, that before there was any Duke of Lancaster, the said toles did yeald revenue to the Crowne, and that the sayd Mannor of Wrangle came to the Duke by mariage with the daughter and heire of Henry Earle of Lincolne and that John Duke of Lancaster receaved for the sayd toles xxiili, per annum, and in the tyme of Henry IV and other kinges succeedinge him as also in her Maiesties tyme the like accountes are found of xili. and odd money receaved, which are all contrary to the sayd pretended freedome and repugnant to the sayd decree made. And besides their takinge of the best thinges in fee farme to themselves and receavinge other tollage and stallage for wares and merchandize brought to their fayres and markettes, wherevnto they have no right as some of the Aldermen and Burgesses vpon their oathes have confessed, are evident proofes against them vat they intend not to have her Maiesties subjects freed, but rather by their pretences to entitle themselves to the sayd toles, to the defraudinge of her Maiestie, and disablinge of her farmor to pay her the rent for the same: In regard whereof and for the vpholdinge of her Maiesties right your supliant beinge still withstood and holden from the benifitt of his lease, most humbly besecheth your honor to write your favourable lettres in his behalfe to the sayd Maior and Burgesses, requiringe them to permitt your supliant in peacable mannor to enioy and take the sayd toles graunted vnto him by her Maiestie accordinge to his lease, or else to come vp and shew cause to your honor why they refuse so to doc, or otherwise to take such order therein for your supliants releife, as your honor shall thinke meete and agreable with equitic, and, as most bound, he will dayly pray for your honor's longe preservacion.

Archer. Also att this meetinge was a lettre openlie redd, sent from Sir Fraunces Hastinges, Knight<sup>1</sup>, to Mr Mayor and his bretherne, in the behalfe of Frances Archer, towchinge the two yarde Lande in the Sowthe Feelde. Itt is nowe agreed that if the towne and Archer can not agree betwixt themselves for the same, and the same to be presentlie determyned, that then the Chamberlyns to enter therevppon, for the vse of the towne.

Fyfteenes. Item at this Hall it was agreed by the greater parte (the Hall beinge devided) that the xv<sup>ens</sup> shalbee levied and taxed as it hathe beene vsed, viz. The XXIIII<sup>ti</sup> for a single fifteene vs. apeece, and the XLVIII<sup>ti</sup> after that rate. And the Commoners to be taxed accordinge to theire habilities.

Hall Papers III, No. 149. [Jan. 19, 1602.] (The Mayor to the Attorney General.) Right worshipfull, whereas it pleased his Maiestie in the xlith yeare of her highnes raigne to graunt vnto vs dyvers liberties, for obtayninge whereof we acknowledge your worships favour our principall meanes, and for defence thereof doe wholly relye of your worships counsell and assistance, we humbly entreat your worship to call before you one Boswell who hath informed against vs in the Exchequer for buyinge of wolles, wherevnto we have pleaded her Maiesties letters patent, that he would leave to molest vs any further with unjust suites. Her Maiesties most gracious graunt is allreadie in parte impeached and generally oppugned thorough the malice of our neighbour adversaries beinge many and of great countenaunce, we humbly request continuance of your worships favour, which we hould our best proteccion, and we the whole corporacion and towne of Leicester will remayne thankfull dutifull and observant of your worship to the vtermost of

CCCCXXXIV. Butchers' Petition.

Hall Papers III, No. 245. [Undated.] To the right worshippfull Mr Maior and the Justices with the rest off y<sup>e</sup> assistantes off the Burrough off Leicester.

The humble peticion off y<sup>e</sup> Company of Butchers off the burrough afforesaid.

Humbly sheweth that whereas your peticioners are bound to bringe there wares which they kill to  $y^e$  weekeday shambles, comonly cald  $y^e$  common shambles and there to sell and expose the same to bee soulld, which said practise and custome tends much to the dammage off your peticioners, especially off the poorer sorte, who are constrained to bringe wares to the said shambles and cannot vend it, the place or shambles beeinge out off  $y^e$  way of tradeinge and remote from the innes and shopkeepers who are the greatest support of the markett: And whereas there is a place cald  $y^e$  Saturday shambles more convenient for your peticioners to sell there wares, the other beinge only vsefull to a few particular men but generally inconvenient to  $y^e$  whole:—

Your peticioners doe humbly pray your worshippe would take the premisses in to your seriouse consideration and appoint the Saturday shambles to sell there wares in the week dayes.

CCCCXXXV. Petition from St Mary's Parish.

Box 9 A, No. 13 (14). [Undated.] Humblye beseechethe your honour, the poore parishoners of the parishe of St Marie, in the towne of Leicester, in the Countie of Leicester, that where the stypend of the pryste, or curatte, whiche nowe servethe within the said parishe, ys onlie viii/i. by the yeare, and so hathe byn for many yeares paste, whereby the said parishoners could nott nor cannott procure any learned man to serve the said cure, the smalenesse of the said stypend beinge suche, by reason whereof the said parishoners have a longe tyme byn served withe unlearned mynisters, vnable to instructe them as appurteignethe throughe the want whereof dyverse of the younger sort are become verrie vndewtifull, lewde and disordered: For reformacion whereof, the said parisshoners have been well disposed (accordinge to their abilities) to augment the said stypend, to thintente a learned mynister might be placed in the said cure:

And now for the better accomplyshinge of whiche the humble petycion of the said parishoners to your honour ys, that where one Edward Holte, esquier, holdethe of Her Maiestie for terme of yeares, the late dissolved colledge of St Marie within the said parishe, whiche terme of yeares ys verrie neere exspyred, yf (in consideracion of the premisses) and for that the towne of Leicester is the most populose towne of the duchie and nedethe most relif for their many poore there, yt maye please your honour, that a lease for (blank) yeares of the premisses maye be graunted vnto three or fower of the most substancyall men, of discreete behavyour, within the said parishe, or els to the Mayor and comburgenses of the said towne of Leicester, to the vse of the said parishoners, to be imployed to the mayntenaunce of a learned mynister within the said parishe, and relief of Her Maiesties tenauntes, beinge for the moste parte of the porest of the said parishe, and other of the pore inhabitauntes within the said parishe and towne: And that therebie the premisses maie be inhabited by tenauntes of better behavior then nowe they arr or have been :-- for the obteyninge of whiche said lease, the said parishoners will yealde vnto Her Maiestie suche a fyne or income, as any other will geave for the same, or as by your honour shalbe thought reasonable, and also suche yearelie rent as ys nowe payable for the same: - Wherein yf your honour vouchsafe your godlie favor in this our peticion it will in tyme come to good effecte and avoidinge of muche contencion, Godes worde shalbe duelie and syncearlie preached, good orders emongest them establisshed, vyce abollyshed, the said parishoners be tought their duties bothe towardes God and their prynce, the poore releyved and Her Maiesties tenementes within the said parishe and towne (many of them beinge nowe in greate decaye) repayred and maynteyned. And also youe shall therebye bynd the said parishoners beinge of the nomber of fyfteene hundred or above, for ever hereafter daielie to praye to God for youe and your honours posterytie in prosperouse estate longe to contynewe with muche increase of honour.

CCCCXXXVI. Easter Book and Terrier of St Mary's, Leicester.

[A small paper volume, in the original binding of stamped leather. In the binding are ff. ix, x, xv—xix, xxii, xxiii, from the Doctrinale of Alexander de Villa Dei, a foreign printed book c. 1520. I owe the identification to Mr C. Sayle.]

The book contains lists of parishioners of St Mary, taken systematically house by house, always beginning with Henry Nubold (of the Mill); first those in Soar Lane, then those in "West Cotes," "Welch Gate," The High Street, and Without

South Gate, about 200 in all; against each householder's name is set the payment for himself, his wife and any other inmates, for servants and apprentices, for h(ouse) g(arden), closes, peartrees, fruit, orchards, kine, calves, mares and colts, ducks, drakes, and hens, etc. The usual payment is 2d. for each member of the household, men-servants and maids, house and garden 1d. each, and the live-stock and fruitful trees 1d. each, as Easter due. The lists are for each of the years 1579—1590. There are also notes of various matters concerning the maker of the book, whose name is not given; he appears to have been acting for the parson of St Mary's whom he calls his master. The owner of the book appears to have been the brother-in-law of one John Bush who was keeping the Easter Book in 1572. Several entries refer to the difficulties found in recovering tithe moneys due. There is an inventory of 1590 of an unimportant kind.

The most interesting entry is on f. 84 b. "A terrer of the 22 landes lyinge in the West Fields belonging to St Mary's Collidge in Leicester," which describes certain strips in the West Fields, already partly enclosed. Mill field and Doveland field were probably two out of the three fields into which this arable area was divided.]

f. 84b. Fyrst in Mr Daynt's Barre piece 2 lands being the 7th and 8th [corr. fr. 15th and 16th] from the lane called Mary Lane.

Item one land in Branson furlong being the 4th from the fur hedge, between West Cotes on both sydes.

Item in the Mylnefeld between West Cotes on both sydes 4 lands and one laye, the laye being the 3rd beande<sup>2</sup> a thorne tree grouun upon the flat that suteth<sup>3</sup> towards the Sore and goeth to the water syd thorow the hedge.

Item one other between West Cotes on both sydes being the 5 from the fur hedge. Item 2, being the 2 and 3 and another being the 5th from the hadland lying on the hill side by Coventry way, the had land being the 6th.

One land lying betwixt West Cotes and Berridge<sup>4</sup> and the other 2 betwixt Berridge on both sides.

Item 2 in the walley by Graveley Furlung between 2 of Mr Rudinges late Parkynson and one of Mr Danytes late Hoores.

Item 2 in the same field suting thorow the hedge in the Cowclose being the 4th and 5th from the hedge between West Cotes and Mr Peltne modo Mr Danyte in Doveland feeld.

Item 2 being the 2 and 3 from the Hadland that leadeth to Mr Ruding shipcote between Mr Danyt and West Cotes.

Item 2 at St Jones Bush between land of St Jones now the Queen's and the hedge upon Mr Danyts land late Mr Pultne.

Documents additional to Volumes I. and II.

The Corporation have recently recovered by purchase the lost original of Earl Robert Fitzparnel's charter (with seal), printed from the Vellum Book copy in volume I. p. 8, also the lost original of Simon de Montfort's charter expelling the Jews from Leicester, which is printed in Nichols' History of Leicestershire, I. i. App. p. 38 No. 13. A translation is given in Thompson's Leicester, p. 72. Bémont, Simon de Montfort, p. 62, gives the date as 1253 but as Simon calls himself 'dominus' not earl the charter may more probably be dated before 1239. The charter is witnessed by domino Almarico de Muterun, domino Waltero de Ayuile, domino Rogero Blundo capellano, Willelmo de Anet[o] tunc ballivo Leicestrie, Willelmo Basset, Willelmo de Martivall. The seal: Ø a shield of arms: a lion rampant, queue fourchée. Legend 'S. Simonis Montisfortis.' R small counterseal, with lion.

Box 12 A contains some summonses from the sheriffs to the bailiff of the honour and town of Leicester, belonging to the reign of Richard II.; a copy of proceedings before the King's Justices at Westminster against the bailiff of Nottingham who had taken toll of the tenants of the honour of Leicester, 6-7 Henry IV.; some copies of Quo Warranto proceedings, printed in the Record Commissioner's volume; and copies of charters printed in these Records, volumes I. and II. The only item of interest is a roll of the goods consumed by the army of Edmund of Lancaster at the siege of Kenilworth, 1266, which should probably be associated with Nos. XXXVI., XXXVIII. in volume I. pp. 124, 126 (see also II. p. 382). It is headed 'a domino Edmundo, isti homines sui de Leycestria petunt ista debita de prisis ex parte sua apud Leycestriam.' In the list the name of Poncius de Mirabel is frequently mentioned, and cloth was bought for Welsh arbalisters and archers. The repair of the 'costrells' or wine bottles, and the purchase of dishes is named. The money lent by the 'communa' of Leicester through Sir Hugh Accover amounted to 40 marks.

Portfolio of Letters No. 155. A 'church brief' (printed) from the Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Howard of Effingham, on behalf of the Kingston-on-Thames Grammar School, Aug. 4, 1585. It has been printed in the Surrey Conct, May 2, 1903, by Professor Joseph B. Mayor.
